It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INTRODUCTORY.

STATE OF NEW YORK :

OFFICE OF FACTORY INSPECTOR, }
ALBANY, January 31, 1894. }

To the Legislature :

The depressed conditions prevailing in manufacturing industries during the greater part of the year just past necessarily affected the work of the officers of the Factory Inspection Department, and perhaps comparison of the results of our labors with the work of other years may not be so satisfactory as formerly from a statistical standpoint. A great many establishments were closed down entirely during the last half of the year. Some ran with materially reduced forces; others kept the major portion of their employes on the pay-roll by working half-time each day, or dividing them into two shifts and working them on alternate days. Such expedients to mitigate so far as possible the rigors of the "hard times" have, of course, been beneficial in that the employes have been kept together and free from absolute want, although in the course of time such scant employment may be inadequate to supply the accumulating wants of the family.

Perhaps it is not out of place here to mention that, from the reports received by the Factory Inspection Department from the deputies thereof, whose information was derived directly and personally from the employers of labor in the varied industries of the State, the business outlook never seemed brighter than just previous to the beginning of the present depression. There was no sign of overproduction, but on the contrary nearly all of the mills and factories had orders ahead which would keep them running for a long time. Many had notified us of a purpose to run overtime in order to meet demands for their products. There were practically no disputes as to wages anywhere in the State, and the outlook was particularly cheering from a trade standpoint. The tightness of the money market gradually made itself felt everywhere, however, until now a vast army of our people are idle, thousands of workshops and mills have been partially or wholly closed, and destitution prevails in many places. There is but one reason given for all this — not the tariff question, for that is used secondarily and only by partisans — but the continued stringency of the money market. “If we could get our bids discounted as before, we would resume manufacturing; we can sell our goods without trouble, but we can’t get the money for them.” These are the almost invariable statements of manufacturers. It seems unfortunate that when people are in need of manufactured products, and thousands are ready to make them, and when the mills are willing to turn them out, and the people are ready to buy them, that there should be idle and hungry men, idle and rusting machinery, an open and ready market for products, but “no money” to bring these wants into juxtaposition and interchange, thus satisfying all and once more making our people fairly prosperous and contented.

The amendments passed by the Legislature of 1892, on the recommendations made by the Governor, and contained in our seventh annual report, materially strengthened the law regulating the manufacture of clothing and certain other articles in tenement houses. Under its provisions we have been enabled to wipe out the worst of the places where clothing was manufactured and to cause a vast improvement in nearly every sweating shop in the city of New York, where the bulk of the evil was located and where most of our efforts in this direction were centered. One thing has been demonstrated satisfactorily so far by the enforcement of the law regulating the manufacture of clothing, and that is, that the dirt and overcrowding which were once the almost invariable attendants of the sweating evil can be practically wiped out. Under the terms of a decision which was rendered some years ago by the Court of Appeals in the tenement-house cigar case, it is impossible to prevent the making of clothing or other articles by families in their living apartments, and the Factory Law was framed so as not to clash with this view of our highest court. Because of this, a very bad state of affairs occasionally is found, where the family is large and of uncleanly habits, or where sickness develops and the fact is kept secret, as is easily possible.

The making of clothing by "home-workers" in their living apartments will always exercise a detrimental effect upon the trade, not only because of the exposure of the clothing to contamination by diseases common to family life in crowded quarters, but because the price paid to this class of work-people will always be a degree or so lower than is paid to shop-workers, and thus tend constantly to depress wages in the shops, and compel economy of space, of rent, of light and of good ventilation in the matter of shop work-rooms. Of course, if the factory inspection force was sufficiently numerous to maintain a constant espionage over each apartment or dwelling occupied by these "home-workers," there is sufficient law in the present act to compel cleanliness and partial protection from contagious and infectious diseases, and perhaps this is as far as the law should go, but there would still remain the cause for depressing wages lower and lower, and the consequent detrimental results to the health, comfort and convenience of those employed in shops. However, the elimination of outsiders from the houses of these people is having a vastly beneficial effect, and the progress already made warrants us in believing that even the "home-working" system of making clothing will soon be attacked by wise legislation and made a thing of the past.

The wholesale manufacturers, as a rule, have co-operated with the inspectors to the extent that they frequently requested examinations to be made of the premises of their outside workers, and seemed desirous of having their goods made up under clean conditions. One result of the law has been the appointment, by a few of the larger concerns, of men to visit the shops and homes of their outside workers and to see that they are kept in a sanitary condition and at all times prepared to stand investigation by the factory inspectors. Impartial observers, reporters, and others who have had opportunities of viewing the past and present conditions of the "sweating" district in New York city, all agree upon the improved condition of the shops and work-rooms in that locality, due allowance being made for the slackness of work, etc. During the year there have been fifty-nine modern, well-appointed factory buildings erected upon sites formerly occupied by tenements swarming with people who lived, worked, ate, slept and — all too many — died therein. These buildings range from five to eight stories in height and contain 483 separate shops or work-rooms.

There have been eighty-five tenement buildings remodeled and made over into shop buildings, their use for domestic purposes having been stopped entirely.

We submit records of 371 tenements, the rooms of which were used for domestic and shop purposes, and in which outsiders were employed to work in the living-rooms, all of which were closed to outside workers* and the tenants instructed that none other than members of their families would be allowed to work in the buildings. This class, however, requires constant surveillance. The adult "members of the family" change in numbers frequently, in a good many instances seeming to vary according to the state of trade. It is difficult always to prove just who are and who are not actual members of these families, and were it not for the readiness of neighbors to tell upon each other, the inspectors would find themselves baffled very often in their investigations.

In all, 17,147 persons employed in the clothing trade have been required to leave the tenements and locate in shops, or to cease using living-rooms as work-rooms, and to this extent it is thought that the conditions under which the work is performed have materially improved.

Under the law of 1892, 196 out of a total of 314 permits had been issued in New York, allowing the use of separate rooms in tenements as workshops, under favorable conditions. These permits are being revoked whenever occasion offers, and the outside workers found in the houses driven into shops. Under the law of 1892, these permits were only given where the domestic apartments and work-rooms were completely separated by partitions and provided with separate entrances. Some expense had been incurred to alter the buildings in this manner, and where the work rooms and living-rooms were kept apart in good faith, it was deemed unjust to suddenly revoke all these permits and order the immediate removal of the workshops, especially as there was an ample field where genuine abuses existed which demanded attention.

The business of manufacturing clothing in dwelling places has been carried on to a comparatively small degree in Brooklyn, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Utica and Albany, but the work in these cities was mostly done in extensions to one and two-story dwellings, with but few of the abuses, however, which attended the same class of work in the city of New York. These places were readily amenable to the law, and the alterations required in them in order to conform to the requirements of the statute were complied with without friction.

The increase of eight in the number of deputy inspectors made by authority of the Legislature of 1893 has enabled us to give attention to details in enforcing the law not possible before. Machinery is now being closely looked after and guarded. This is an important duty of the inspectors, the intelligent performance of which will prevent a vast amount of suffering and loss of lives and limbs. Employers generally are becoming imbued with a purpose to adopt all precautionary means to protect the persons of those engaged in and about their machinery, and the patentees and makers of machinery are now attaching safeguards to the product of their factories before the machines leave the shops. This policy has been adopted because of the changes ordered to be made in their machinery which was considered dangerous by the inspectors, when making their visits to the work-rooms. One result of this supervision over machinery is that a number of safety-devices have been invented and generally applied to machines which were deemed to be dangerous, and there is no doubt that there is, in consequence, a gradual but appreciable reduction in the number of accidents occurring in the factories of this State. The requirement that employers must report to the inspectors the details of all injuries happening in their establishments has had the effect of suggesting to many of them the advisability of taking all needful precautions against possible dangers, and they take pardonable pride in showing the inspectors what has been done by them to protect the persons of those engaged in operating their machinery.

The factory inspectors take pleasure in thanking the Attorney-General for uniform courtesy and valuable assistance in enforcing the law; also the officers and members of labor organizations generally for their co-operation.

As the actual provisions of the law become better understood, and it is known that factory inspectors are not clothed with extreme and almost omnipotent powers (which idea seemed to prevail for a long time in some quarters), there is heard less grumbling about the amount and manner of work done by the inspectors, and as the unfriendly criticism has about ceased, there has arisen in its place a seeming purpose to aid in the intelligent and practical enforcement of the law.

The deputies of the department are entitled to full credit for the efficient and acceptable manner in which the numerous provisions of the law have been enforced, and their co-operation with the Factory Inspector has been all that could be desired.

THE FACTORY INSPECTION LAW.*

The law relating to the inspection of manufacturing establishments was amended by the Legislature of 1893 so as to read as follows :

Chapter 409, Laws of 1886 (as amended).

AN ACT to regulate the employment of women and children in manufacturing establishments, and to provide for the appointment of inspectors to enforce the same.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows :

SECTION 1. No person under eighteen years of age and no woman under twenty-one years of age, employed in any manufacturing establishment, shall be required, permitted or suffered to work therein more than sixty hours in any one week, or more than ten hours in any one day, unless for the purpose of making a shorter work day on the last day of the week, nor more hours in any one week than will make an average of ten hours per day for the whole number of days in which such person or such woman shall so work during such week ; and in no case shall any person under eighteen years of age, or any woman under twenty-one years of age, work in any such establishment after nine o'clock in the evening or before six o'clock in the morning of any day. Every person, firm, corporation, or company employing any person under eighteen years of age, or any woman under twenty-one years of age, in any manufacturing establishment, shall post and keep posted in a conspicuous place in every room where such help is employed, a printed notice stating the number of hours of labor per day required of such persons for each day of the week, and the number of hours of labor exacted or permitted to be performed by such persons shall not exceed the number of hours of labor so posted as being required. The time of beginning and ending the day's labor shall be the time stated in such notice; provided, that such woman under twenty-one and persons under eighteen years of age may begin after the time set for beginning and stop before the time set in such notice for the stopping of the day's labor; but they shall not be permitted or required to perform any labor before the time stated on the notices as the time for beginning the day's labor, nor after the time stated upon the notices as the hour for ending the day's labor. The terms of the notice stating the hours of labor required shall not be changed after the beginning of labor on the first day of the week without the consent of the Factory Inspector, Assistant Factory Inspector, or a Deputy Factory Inspector. When, in order to make a shorter work day on the last day of the week, women under twenty-one and youths under eighteen years of age are to be required, permitted or suffered to work more than ten hours in any one day, in a manufacturing establishment, it shall be the duty of the proprietor, agent, foreman, superintendent or other person employing such persons to notify the Factory Inspector, Assistant Factory Inspector, or a Deputy Factory Inspector, in charge of the district, in writing, of such intention, stating the number of hours of labor per day which it is proposed to permit or require, and the date upon which the necessity for such lengthened day's labor shall cease, and also again forward such notification when it shall actually have ceased. A record of the amount of overtime so worked, and of the days upon which it was performed, with the names of the employees who were thus required or permitted to work more than ten hours in any one day, shall be kept in the office of the manufacturing establishment and produced upon the demand of any officer appointed to enforce the provisions of this act.

*The first factory inspection act was passed May 18, 1886; amended May 25, 1887; again amended June 15, 1889; again amended May 21, 1890; again amended May 18, 1892, and as it now stands was amended March 22, 1893; being chapter 409 of the Laws of 1886; 462 of the Laws of 1887, 560 of the Laws of 1889; 898 of the Laws of 1890, 673 of the Laws of 1892, and 173, Laws of 1893.

§ 2, No child under fourteen years of age shall be employed in any manufacturing establishment within this State. It shall be the duty of every person employing children to keep a register, in which shall be recorded the name, birthplace, age and place of residence of every person employed by him under the age of sixteen years; and it shall be unlawful for any proprietor, agent, foreman or other person in or connected with a manufacturing establishment to hire or employ any child under the age of sixteen years to work therein without there is first provided and placed on file in the office an affidavit made by the parent or guardian, stating the age, date and place of birth of said child; if said child have no parent or guardian, then such affidavit shall be made by the child, which affidavit shall be kept on file by the employer, and which said register and affidavit shall be produced for inspection on demand made by the Inspector, Assistant Inspector, or any of the deputies appointed under this act. There shall be posted conspicuously in every room where children under sixteen years of age are employed, a list of their names with their ages respectively. No child under the age of sixteen years shall be employed in any manufacturing establishment who cannot read and write simple sentences in the English language, except during the vacation of the public schools in the city or town where such minor lives. The Factory Inspector, Assistant Inspector, and Deputy Inspectors, shall have power to demand a certificate of physical fitness from some regular physician, in the case of children who may seem physically unable to perform the labor at which they may be employed, and shall have power to prohibit the employment of any minor that cannot obtain such a certificate.

§ 3. No person, firm or corporation shall employ or permit any child under the age of fifteen years to have the care, custody, management of or to operate any elevator or shall employ or permit any person under the age of eighteen years to have the care, custody, management or operation of any elevator running at a speed of over two hundred feet a minute.

§ 4. It shall be the duty of the owner, agent, or lessee of any manufacturing establishment where there is any elevator, hoisting-shaft or well-hole, to cause the same to be properly and substantially inclosed or secured, if in the opinion of the Factory Inspector, or of the Assistant Factory Inspector, or a Deputy Factory Inspector unless disapproved by the Factory Inspector, it is necessary to protect the lives or limbs of those employed in such establishment. It shall also be the duty of the owner, agent or lessee of each of such establishments to provide or cause to be provided, if, in the opinion of the inspector, the safety of persons in or about the premises should require it, such proper trap or automatic doors, so fastened in or at all elevator ways as to form a substantial surface when closed, and so constructed as to open and close by action of the elevator in its passage, either ascending or descending, but the requirements of this section shall not apply to passenger elevators that are closed on all sides. The Factory Inspector, Assistant Factory Inspector and Deputy Factory Inspectors, may inspect the cables, gearing or other apparatus of elevators in manufacturing establishments, and require that the same be kept in a safe condition.

§ 5. Proper and substantial hand rails shall be provided on all stairways in manufacturing establishments, and where, in the opinion of the Factory Inspector, or of the Assistant Factory Inspector or Deputy Factory Inspector, unless disapproved by the Factory Inspector, it is necessary, the steps of said stairs in all such establishments shall be substantially covered with rubber, securely fastened thereon, for the better safety of persons employed in said establishment. The stairs shall be properly screened at the sides and bottom, and all doors leading in or to such factory shall be so constructed as to open outwardly where practicable, and shall be neither locked, bolted nor fastened during working hours.

§ 6. If, in the opinion of the Factory Inspector, or of the Assistant Factory Inspector, or of a Deputy Factory Inspector, it is necessary to insure the safety of the persons employed in any manufacturing establishment, three or more stories in height, one or more fire-escapes, as may be deemed by the factory inspector as necessary and sufficient therefor, shall be provided on the outside of such establishment, connecting with each floor above the first, well fastened and secured and of sufficient strength, each of which fire-escapes shall have landings or balconies, not less than six feet in length and three feet in width, guarded by iron railings not less than three feet in height, and embracing at least two windows at each story and connecting with the interior by easily accessible and unobstructed openings, and the balconies or landings shall be connected by iron stairs not less than eighteen inches wide, the steps not to be less than six inches tread, placed at a proper slant, and protected by a well secured hand-rail on both sides with a twelve inch wide drop-ladder from the lower platform reaching to the ground. Any other plan or style of fire-escape shall be sufficient, if approved by the Factory Inspector, but if not so approved, the Factory Inspector may notify the owner, proprietor or lessee of such establishment or of the building in which such establishment is conducted, or the agent or superintendent or either of them, in writing, that any such other plan or style of fire-escape is not sufficient, and may by an order in writing, served in like manner, require one or more fire-escapes, as he shall deem necessary and sufficient, to be provided for such establishment, at such locations and of such plan and style as shall be specified in such written order. Within twenty days after the service of such order, the number of fire-escapes required in such order for such establishment shall be provided therefor, each of which shall be either of the plan and style and in accordance with the specifications in said order required, or of the plan and style in this section above described and declared to be sufficient. The windows or doors to each fire-escape shall be of sufficient size and be located as far as possible consistent with accessibility, from the stairways and elevator hatchways or openings, and the ladder thereof shall extend to the roof. Stationary stairs or ladders shall be provided on the inside of such establishment from the upper story to the roof, as a means of escape in case of fire.

§ 7. It shall be the duty of the owner, agent, superintendent or other person having charge of such manufacturing establishment, or of any floor or part thereof, to report in writing to the Factory Inspector all accidents or injury done to any person in such factory, within forty-eight hours of the time of the accident, stating as fully as possible the extent and cause of such injury, and the place where the injured person has been sent, with such other information relative thereto as may be required by the Factory Inspector. The Factory Inspector or Assistant Factory Inspector and Deputy Factory Inspectors under the supervision of the Factory Inspector, are hereby authorized and empowered to fully investigate the causes of such accidents, and to require such precautions to be taken as will, in their judgment, prevent the recurrence of similar accidents.

§ 8. It shall be the duty of the owner of any manufacturing establishment, or his agents, superintendent or other person in charge of the same, to furnish and supply, or cause to be furnished and supplied therein, in the discretion of the Factory Inspector, or of the Assistant Factory Inspector, or of a Deputy Factory Inspector, unless disapproved by the Factory Inspector, where machinery is used, belt shifters or other safe mechanical contrivances, for the purpose of throwing on or off belts or pulleys; and wherever possible machinery therein shall be provided with loose pulleys; all vats, pans, saws, planers, cogs, gearing, belting, shafting, set-screws, and machinery of every description therein shall be properly guarded, and no person shall remove or make ineffective any safeguard around or attached to any planer, saw, belting, shafting or other machinery, or around any vat or pan, while the same is in use, unless for the purpose of immediately making repairs thereto, and all such safeguards shall be promptly replaced. By attaching thereto a notice to that effect, the use of any machinery may be prohibited by the Factory Inspector, Assistant Factory Inspector or by a Deputy Factory Inspector, unless such notice is disapproved by the Factory Inspector, should such machinery be regarded as dangerous. Such notice must be signed by the inspector who issues it, and shall only be removed after the required safeguards are provided, and the unsafe and dangerous machine shall not be used in the meantime. Exhaust fans of sufficient power shall be provided for the purpose of carrying off dust from emery wheels and grindstones, and dust-creating machinery therein. No person under eighteen years of age and no woman under twenty-one years of age shall be allowed to clean machinery while in motion.

§ 9. A suitable and proper wash-room and water-closets shall be provided in each manufacturing establishment, and such water-closets shall be properly screened and ventilated and be kept at all times in a clean condition, and if women or girls are employed in any such establishment, the water-closets used by them shall have separate approaches and be separate and apart from those used by men. All water-closets shall be kept free of obscene writing and marking. A dressing-room shall be provided for women and girls, when required by the Factory Inspector, in any manufacturing establishment in which women and girls are employed.

§ 10. Not less than sixty minutes shall be allowed for the noon-day meals in any manufacturing establishment in this State. The Factory Inspector, his assistant or any of his deputies, may, for good cause shown, issue a written permit in special cases, allowing a shorter meal time at noon. Such permit must be conspicuously posted in the main entrance of the establishment, and may be revoked at any time the Factory Inspector deems necessary. Where employes are permitted or required to work over time after six o'clock in the evening, for a longer period than one hour, they shall be allowed at least twenty minutes after six o'clock to obtain a lunch.

§ 11. The walls and ceilings of each work-room in every manufacturing establishment shall be lime washed or painted when in the opinion of the Factory Inspector, Assistant Factory Inspector or of a Deputy Factory Inspector, unless disapproved of by the Factory Inspector, it shall be conducive to the health or cleanliness of the persons working therein.

§ 12. Any officer of the Factory Inspection Department, or other competent person designated for such purpose by the Factory Inspector, shall inspect any building used as a workshop or manufacturing establishment or anything attached thereto, located therein or connected therewith, outside of the cities of New York or Brooklyn, which has been represented to be unsafe or dangerous to life or limb. If it appears upon such inspection that the building or anything attached thereto, located therein or connected therewith is unsafe or dangerous to life or limb, the Factory Inspector shall order the same to be removed or rendered safe and secure, and if such notification be not complied with within a reasonable time, he shall prosecute whoever may be responsible for such delinquency.

§ 13. No room or apartment in any tenement or dwelling-house, shall be used, except by the immediate members of the family living therein, for the manufacture of coats, vests, trousers, knee-pants, overalls, cloaks, hats, caps, suspenders, jerseys, blouses, waists, waist-bands, underwear, neck-wear, furs, fur trimmings, fur garments, shirts, purses, feathers, artificial flowers, cigarettes, or cigars. No person, firm or corporation shall hire or employ any person to work in any room or apartment, in any rear building or building in the rear of a tenement or dwelling-house at making in whole or in part any of the articles mentioned in this section, without first obtaining a written permit from the Factory Inspector, his assistant, or one of his deputies, stating the maximum number of persons allowed to be employed therein. Such permit shall not be granted until an inspection of such premises is made by the Factory Inspector, his assistant, or one of his deputies, and may be revoked by the Factory Inspector, at any time the health of the community or of those so employed may require it. It shall be framed and posted in a conspicuous place in the room or in one of the rooms to which it relates. Every person, firm, company or corporation, contracting for the manufacture of any of the articles mentioned in this section, or giving out the incomplete material from which they or any of them are to be made, or to be wholly or partially finished, shall keep a written register of the names and addresses of all persons to whom such work is given to be made, or with whom they may have contracted to do the same. Such register shall be produced for inspection and a copy thereof shall be furnished on demand made by the Factory Inspector, his assistant, or one of his deputies. No person shall knowingly sell or expose for sale any of the articles mentioned in this section which were made in any dwelling-house, tenement-house, or building in the rear of a tenement or dwelling-house, without the permit required by this section; and any officer appointed to enforce the provisions of this act who shall find any of such articles made in violation of the provisions hereof, shall conspicuously affix to such article a label containing the words "tenement made" printed in small pica capital letters on a tag not less than two inches in length; and such officer shall notify the person owning or alleged to own such articles that he so labeled them. No person shall remove or deface any tag or label so affixed. When any article mentioned in this section is found by the Factory Inspector, his assistant, or any of his deputies, to be made under unclean or unhealthy conditions, he shall affix thereto the label prescribed by this section, and shall immediately notify the local board of health, whose duty it shall be to disinfect the same and thereupon remove such label.

§ 14. Not less than two hundred and fifty cubic feet of air space shall be allowed for each person in any work-room where persons are employed during the hours between six o'clock in the morning and six o'clock in the evening, and not less than four hundred cubic feet of air space shall be provided for each person in any work-room where persons are employed between six o'clock in the evening and six o'clock in the morning. By a written permit the Factory Inspector, Assistant Factory Inspector or a Deputy Factory Inspector, with the consent of the Factory Inspector, may allow persons to be employed in a room where there are less than four hundred cubic feet of air space for each person employed between six o'clock in the evening and six o'clock in the morning, provided such room is lighted by electricity at all times during such hours while persons are employed therein. There shall be sufficient means of ventilation provided in each work-room of every manufacturing establishment, and the Factory Inspector, Assistant Factory Inspector and Deputy Factory Inspectors, under the direction of the Factory Inspector, shall notify the owner, agent or lessee, in writing, to provide or cause to be provided ample and proper means of ventilating such work-room and shall prosecute such owner, agent or lessee if such notification be not complied with within twenty days of the service of such notice.

of his term of office, until his successor shall be appointed and qualified. The Factory Inspector is hereby authorized to appoint, from time to time, not exceeding twenty-four persons to be Deputy Factory Inspectors, not more than ten of whom shall be women, and he shall have power to remove the same at any time. The term of office of the Factory Inspector and of the Assistant Factory Inspector shall be three years each. Annual salaries shall be paid in equal monthly installments, as follows: To the Factory Inspector, three thousand dollars; to the Assistant Factory Inspector, two thousand five hundred dollars; to each Deputy Factory Inspector, one thousand two hundred dollars. A sub-office may be opened in the city of New York. The reasonable necessary traveling and other expenses of the Deputy Factory Inspectors while engaged in the performance of their duties shall be paid upon vouchers approved by the Factory Inspector and audited by the Comptroller.

§ 16. It shall be the duty of the Factory Inspector and the Assistant Factory Inspector, and each of the Deputy Factory Inspectors under the supervision and direction of the Factory Inspector, to cause this act to be enforced, and to cause all violators of this act to be prosecuted, and for that purpose they and each of them are hereby empowered to visit and inspect at all reasonable hours, and as often as shall be practicable and necessary, all manufacturing establishments in this state. It shall be unlawful for any person to interfere with, obstruct or hinder, by force or otherwise, any officer appointed to enforce the provisions of this act, while in the performance of his or her duties, or to refuse to properly answer questions asked by such officer with reference to any of the provisions hereof. The Factory Inspector may divide the state into districts and assign one or more Deputy Factory Inspectors to each district, and transfer them from one district to another as the best interests of the state may, in his judgment, require. Any Deputy Factory Inspector may be appointed to act as clerk in the main office of the Factory Inspector, which shall be furnished in the Capitol and set apart for the use of the Factory Inspector. The Assistant Factory Inspector and Deputy Factory Inspectors shall make reports to the Factory Inspector from time to time, as may be required by the Factory Inspector, and the Factory Inspector shall make an annual report to the legislature during the month of January of each year. The Factory Inspector, Assistant Factory Inspector and each Deputy Factory Inspector shall have the same power as a notary public to administer oaths and take affidavits in matters connected with the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

§ 17. The district attorney of any county of this state is hereby authorized upon the request of the Factory Inspector, Assistant Factory Inspector, or of a Deputy Factory Inspector, or of any other person of full age, to commence and prosecute to termination before any recorder, police justice, or court of record, in the name of the people of the state, actions or proceedings against any person or persons reported to him to have violated the provisions of this act.

§ 18. The words "manufacturing establishment" wherever used in this act, shall be construed to mean any mill, factory or workshop where one or more persons are employed at labor.

§ 19. A copy of this act shall be conspicuously posted and kept posted in each work-room of every manufacturing establishment in this state.

§ 21.* Any person who violates or omits to comply with any of the provisions of this act, or who suffers or permits any child to be employed in violation of its provisions, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty nor more than fifty dollars for a first offense, and not less than fifty nor more than one hundred dollars for a second offense or imprisonment for not more than ten days, and for a third offense a fine of not less than two hundred and fifty dollars and not more than thirty days' imprisonment.

§ 21. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

§ 22. This act shall take effect immediately.

THE HOURS OF LABOR.

The law of New York makes sixty hours the limit of time which women under 21 and youths under 18 years of age may labor, in any one week, in manufacturing establishments. It is provided that the number of working hours in one day for such persons, shall be ten, unless the excess over that number shall be deducted on the last day of the week, so that the total hours for the week shall not exceed sixty. The law of Massachusetts prohibits the employment of all women for more than fifty-eight hours in one week. Mercantile as well as manufacturing establishments are included. New Jersey restricts the hours of labor of women and minors in manufacturing establishments to fifty-five hours a week, and the highest court of the State has declared the law constitutional. The law of Illinois, passed within a year, goes still farther and makes eight hours a day's labor for all women and minors in manufacturing establishments. It will be seen from this that the Empire State is somewhat behind the times in the direction of ameliorating the conditions under which its women and children are employed.

The tendency of the age is toward a shorter work-day for all classes of workers. The employes of the State and of several cities in the State have had eight-hour laws passed for their benefit, and the trade organizations, composed mainly of men, are agitating for the establishment of an eight-hour work-day, and some of them have already succeeded in getting it. The others will no doubt succeed in time. But the women, who are a constantly increasing element in our industrial life, and the children, who are certainly entitled to all the legal benefits possible to bestow, cannot organize successfully to obtain a reduction of their hours of labor, although from a physical standpoint at least they are more entitled to consideration in this direction than are the members of the trades unions as a rule. An illustration of the need of legislative assistance to obtain for women and children an equal work-day with the organized members of the same trade is seen in the cigarmaking business. The Cigarmaker's Union has for a number of years enforced an eight-hour work-day among its membership, which comprises a vast majority of the journeymen of that trade. The women and children, who are employed as strippers, however, who have no union, and who are the poorest paid workers in the trade, must work for the same employers two hours longer each day. Their work is just as laborious and confining as the actual making of cigars, and, to them, comparatively more unhealthy than cigarmaking is to cigarmakers.

It will be seen from this that the women and children can only look to the Legislature to obtain the relief which nature and existing industrial conditions demand for them, and now that a number of sister States have adopted laws of this character it is to be hoped that New York will this year follow their lead.

CHILD LABOR.

As against an average of thirty eight children under 16 years of age in each 1,000 persons employed in manufacturing establishments during 1892, there have been found during the year 1893 an average of 33.6 children in each 1,000 employes. This is a decrease of about twelve per cent. over the previous year, and of over seventy-five per cent. since the Factory Law was first enacted in 1886. The continued reduction in the number of children employed indicates that manufacturers are becoming convinced by experience that child labor is not cheap labor, however small may be the wages paid to children. Not only does this decrease of child labor indicate a gratifying change of policy on the part of many employers, but, taken in connection with the enforcement of the law prohibiting the employment of children under 16 years of age who are unable to read and write the English language, it indicates that a greater interest is taken by parents in the education of their offspring. In our first annual report, transmitted to the Legislature in January, 1886, in referring to the illiteracy prevailing in our manufacturing establishments, we said :

“The ignorance is actually alarming. Thousands of children, born in this country, or who came here in early childhood, are unable to write, almost as many are unable to read, and still other thousands can do little more than write their own names. Possibly one-third of the affidavits of parents examined by us in the factory towns were signed with a cross mark, and it seems to us that when the children who now require these affidavits grow up and have children of their own about whom to make affidavits, the proportion of cross marks to the papers will not be decreased. Very few American-born children can tell the year of their birth, the State they live in, or spell the name of their native town. Extended experience and close questioning have satisfied the Inspectors that something ought to be done by the State to educate those who are now on the verge of manhood or womanhood, and that a system of night schools ought to be provided by law for the benefit of those who failed to receive the rudiments of an education in their earlier years. This recommendation applies more particularly to the towns and villages in the interior of the State."

The requirement that children under 16 must have at least a rudimentary English education was passed in 1889. It has had a far-reaching effect, not only upon our native-born children, many of whose parents now know that their progeny will be cut off from employment in factories until they are past 16 unless they receive some education, and therefore take a more lively interest in sending them to school, but it has also had pronounced results among the non-English-speaking immigrants who have come among us in such vast numbers of late years. These latter were usually accompanied by numerous offspring of tender years, who were almost immediately after landing sent out to find work in some factory. They usually found it, and no attention was thereafter paid to their education. These immigrants, for reasons of their own, settled in colonies, practically isolating themselves, in various quarters of the large cities, and nothing but the mother tongue was spoken or read. They formed well-defined settlements whose habits were as alien to the land as were their languages, and their children were growing up in almost absolute ignorance of the customs and laws of this country. The provision compelling a slight English schooling has been strictly enforced with reference to these foreign-speaking children, and although this has caused considerable friction at times between the inspectors and those to whose interest it was to keep the children employed, there has been no relaxation in our efforts to obtain compliance with it, as we regard it as one of the most important and salutary requirements of the Factory Law. The extent to which these children gain employment in factories may be judged from the fact that ninety illiterate Italian children under 16 years of age were ordered out of a single factory at the opening of the schools in New York last September. It is now generally understood among these people that their children must obtain the rudiments of an English education before they are eligible to work in a manufacturing establishment, and there is consequently a more lively interest taken in their education by their parents.

A great many children, recently arrived from European countries, are met with, however, who seem to be without parents on this side of the Atlantic. On being questioned, they state that their parents are in the old country, and that they, the children, came over with relatives and are now earning money to pay their parents' passage to the United States. Some hardship has, no doubt, resulted from the enforcement of the illiteracy law in these cases, because the relatives who brought these children over do not care, as a rule, to be burdened with the cost of their support and education. It seems to us that it would be a proper policy, therefore, for our immigration officials to exclude children under 16 years of age who propose to settle in the State of New York unless they can read and write English, or are accompanied by parents who are able to maintain them until they have obtained sufficient education to do this.

We again respectfully urge that the Legislature extend to the children employed in the mercantile houses the same legal protection that is given to children employed in factories and workshops. The arguments used to defeat the bill to accomplish this which have been presented from year to year, have all been born of self-interest and the grasping purposes of those engaged in trade. They defend the system of child labor in mercantile houses because of its profit, but this fact they hide with a cloak of seeming charitableness and specious arguments about their interest in the welfare of the children. They have no such interest. If they had the children would be paid better wages ; they would not be compelled to labor such long hours ; they would not be discharged for trivial offenses, or for asking an advance in wages when their increasing age or experience would warrant better pay ; and they would not be partially dispensed with upon the introduction of mechanical cash-carriers, adopted because of greater cheapness, if all the high-flown talk of disinterested philanthropy were sincere. Nothing can be said in favor of abolishing child labor in factories which will not apply with equal or greater force against the employment of children in retail stores. It seems singular, if not ridiculous, therefore, that restrictions should be placed upon the employment of children in factories, and none at all upon their employment in mercantile houses. The anomaly should cease.

The following tables will show the percentage of child labor by factory inspection districts in the State of New York :

HOISTWAYS AND ELEVATORS.

The problem of guarding these important accessories to a manufacturing plant continues as troublesome, almost, as in the early days of legislation on the subject. The many styles of elevators, their various speeds, their peculiar locations, different sizes, and the miscellaneous character of the establishments in which they are located, all combine to prevent the adoption of any arbitrary or uniform policy of guards, and, in fact, make it difficult, if not impossible in numerous instances, to suggest any practical system of guards at all. There are quite a number of automatic devices, some of them patented, upon the market, but experience has shown that none of them are applicable in a majority of cases, and all of them are defective in some respect where the speed of the car is more than fifty feet per minute — and most elevators are run at a greater speed than this. If automatic guards are not put on, and the closing of the doors or gates is left to the operator, his carelessness and neglect are apt to cause an accident; when there is no regular operator, and no effective automatic safeguards are applied, the risk becomes constant and imminent. There have been fifty-seven accidents upon hoistways and elevators reported to this department during the year from manufacturing establishments, seven of these being fatal. Beside these casualties, quite a number of deaths and injuries have occurred upon elevators located in other than manufacturing establishments, but which are not required to be reported to the Factory Inspectors. We are endeavoring, by urging the adoption of such safeguards as our experience suggests to be practicable, to prevent, so far as possible, the loss of life and limb from the use of hoistways and elevators. The co-operation of employers and employes, as well as the makers of the elevators, would materially aid us in this undertaking, but this is not always ungrudgingly given. We have no suggestion to offer at this time as to further legislation on this subject, and believe that the statute must continue for the present to be flexible and the inspectors to be guided by common sense in dealing with the matter, although it is manifestly a serious responsibility to be under.

FIRE-ESCAPES.

Fire-escapes to the number of 200 were reported to the New York city building department as being necessary in our opinion, and seventy-five of them have been erected. It can not be definitely stated whether the others are to be erected or not, because we have been unable to obtain any information upon the subject from the officers of that bureau. In the remainder of the State fire-escapes have been ordered upon ninety-nine manufacturing establishments, thirty-three of which are reported to have been erected. The number erected is really much greater, but the places in which they have been ordered being scattered throughout the villages and small towns, the exact number will not be known until the places are again visited.

REPORTING OF ACCIDENTS.

There have been 772 reports of accidents in manufacturing establishments received during the past year. Forty-five of these accidents were fatal. It is now better understood among employers that such casualties must be reported, and the statistics are consequently reliable so far as those occurring outside of the city of New York are concerned. It is difficult to obtain complete statistics upon this subject in New York city. The newspapers there chronicle only a part of the fatal accidents, and even then only when peculiar circumstances surround them; and for our first knowledge of accidents, as a rule, we must largely depend upon the newspapers. We have had two firms convicted during the past year for failure to report accidents, and this has had a salutary effect in their immediate neighborhoods. The reports received may be classified as follows:

FACTORY VENTILATION—EXHAUST FANS.

The question of ventilating work-rooms, especially where dust arises in greater or less quantities, and becomes injurious and offensive to those employed, is one which is attracting more attention every year, and information on the subject is constantly being asked for by progressive employers who desire to improve the conditions under which their operatives labor. This matter was the subject of a paper read by John Franey, the Assistant Factory Inspector of this State, at the seventh annual convention of the International Association of Factory Inspectors, held at Chicago, September 19–23, 1893, the complete text of which is herewith given :

PURIFYING AIR IN FACTORIES.

The purport of this paper is not to enter into lengthy theoretical calculations of the amount of air required by employes in manufactories for respiration, as dependent upon the varied existing conditions therein met, nor to incite a protracted discussion as to the best methods of supplying it. Lines of manufacture differ so materially with the generators of gases, smoke, dust and foul odors, together with the number of occupants required to work in a given space, so widely reduced in one case, and increased in another, that a satisfactory resumé of the subject could not be handled outside of an extensive volume. The aim, therefore, will simply be to present in as concise and practicable a manner as possible, means which will readily recommend themselves to every proprietor of such establishments for adoption in overcoming the evil effects to workmen attendant upon the necessary presence of dust-creating machinery and air-vitiating processes.

The complaints of employes to the effect that the atmosphere is neither agreeable, comfortable nor healthful, in numerous lines of industries, are by no means without foundation. This every inspector, through his periodic visits to various institutions, has learned to thoroughly appreciate. Foremost among evils in the majority of factories are the refuse from emery and buffing wheels, gases and smoke in foundries at "pouring off" time, the dust and dirt from tumbling barrels, and yet there are but few large industries which do not have some particular process for bringing forth their products which is so vitiating to the air as to render it injurious to a great extent. We also come in contact with emanations from defective sanitary arrangements, odors from oils and grease, unhealthy and destructive acid fumes, and innumerable noxious gases, which, combined with the air already vitiated by respiration in factories employing large numbers of people, render it foul in the extreme. Common evils like some of those referred to above, do not end in themselves. In hundreds of places, they go hand in hand with the various and peculiar processes of perfecting the output of the plant, and being thus united, it is no marvel that the air is exceedingly disagreeable and unhealthy. Other frequent but necessary annoying appliances, for which there are effectual remedies, as we shall see further on, are steam drying cylinders, glue pots, bleaching, lacquer and pickling rooms, dye-houses, etc.

If one will but give thought to the subject, it will readily be seen that the architectural features of buildings used for manufacturing purposes, occupy a most important position with regard to their ventilation. Without fear of criticism it may be stated that, especially in the case of foundry buildings and other similar situations where large quantities of steam, smoke and gas are generated, the architectural features at once clearly indicate whether the occupants are to suffer from an accumulation of these, or whether, on the other hand, it is to be an easy task to maintain an atmosphere sufficiently pure to make the situation comfortable. Even in the example of the largest industrial establishments of this country, we frequently find in getting at the root of the matter, that an architect has been employed who has given no consideration to the ventilation of the building in planning it, either on account of utter ignorance of the subject or carelessness in overlooking it. The attendant result is that it is an impossibility by any natural means to free certain apartments of the premises from the disagreeable odors and poisonous gases therein created, and it is no infrequent occurrence that the conditions are such that even by the introduction of a fan, most carefully applied to the work, only moderate relief can be insured. Further than this, we frequently observe in such situations that gases and odors permeate other large areas of the establishment, with the result of not only causing ill health among the occupants where they originate, but to those employed in other departments as well. Concerning the latter feature, mechanical and civil engineers who have in charge the details of the arrangement and location of the different departments and machinery, are as frequently at fault as the owner or the architect. The application of fans to places of this character, and the conditions under which they can be installed to advantage, are not sufficiently well known to the engineering and architectural professions, and it is certainly a subject which is deserving of far greater consideration and more careful study than it has heretofore received.

The location of a factory, also, is a subject which is not always decided in its proper manner. The question of power and railroad facilities, of course, must always be the first points considered. Is not the low price of land usually the next important feature? Rather than let this come next, the point of healthy surroundings and a superabundance of pure air and light, should govern the selection of the building site. The present movement among real estate boomers and founders of new towns, while having the effect of more widely separating the manufacturing industries in attracting them from city points, is altogether a commendable one, as it has the result of vastly improving the atmosphere which employes are compelled to breathe about ten hours out of every twenty-four. Foster as much as is possible this idea of locating new works, and there will still always remain cheaply built and closely clustered shops in large manufacturing cities. Until recent years the thought of applying any means of ventilation to shops of the latter class has been regarded as preposterous. Manufacturers of improved ventilating appliances, in seeking their sale, have met with the unanswerable arguments of the owners of such institutions: "We have run our works for years without such rigs, and there is no reason why we can not continue to do so!" The positive position of the various State Legislatures toward the better protection and increased comfort of employes in all establishments is, therefore, not only receiving the commendation of those who daily toil in such shops, but is supported by the sentiment of the public at large.

There are, of course, many far-sighted managers of mills who will appreciate that the application of fans to the source of pollution of the atmosphere presents two aspects, a humanitarian standpoint and that of monetary return. Those with less perceptive powers, and who scrutinize the original outlay far too closely, are free to assert that the latter is vastly more imaginary than real. It is a simple matter of record, however, that this is not the case. In this paper it is impossible to present detailed data from various manufacturers upon this point, but the frequent remarks of factory owners who have installed improved ventilating and dust-removing apparatus, are enough in themselves to show that such outfits yield direct returns in the increased amount of work turned out per day, and with a decrease in the absence of employes. The percentage will range from eight per cent. to twenty per cent. in the former instance, and five per cent. to twelve per cent. in the latter. We will now apply the subject of the paper more particularly to stated classes of buildings and situations which need improving by the application of fans, pointing out the most approved methods of their introduction.

Foundries.

Let us first consider the building where the molding and casting is done, leaving the casting-cleaning rooms and tumbling rooms for a separate heading. The most general construction form used for foundries proper is the one-story type, generally provided with lantern roofs, and having large wall, roof and window surfaces per cubic foot of inclosed space. It is usually calculated that the high walls and sloping roof, coupled with the opening of the ventilators (all being conditions helping to that end) will be ample for carrying off the fumes, gases and smoke generated at "pouring-off" time, and, in a properly designed structure, with favorable conditions of the wind, such results are usually realized to such a degree that an inspector during the summer months can find but little at fault. If, however, one happens to visit such a building during the "heat," with the winds contrary, the situation is different. It will readily be appreciated that in cold weather, keeping the windows open is impracticable beyond a slight extent. While it is true that the hot sand and castings in foundries tend to heat the air, yet even in conjunction with the heating apparatus in severe weather, the opening of windows for discharging the smoke and gases will reduce the temperature so greatly that it will be uncomfortable to work in. All these features clearly indicate that with the most favorable conditions of construction, there is scarcely a foundry to which a ventilating appliance, properly installed, will not greatly remedy the working temperature and purity of the atmosphere. The most common manner of ventilating manufacturing departments of this kind is by the installation of a fan known as the disc or propeller type. With this style of fan construction it is possible to deliver a greater volume of air per horsepower than with any other construction form.

In calculating the required size of a disc propeller fan for a foundry, one must first take into consideration the construction of the building. Generally speaking, in a structure of the type above described, an estimate based upon a change of air once every four to five minutes during the "pouring-off" period will be ample. With buildings having flat roofs, and especially with those having low ceilings, it is required to estimate much more liberally. A change of air once every one or two minutes must be provided for, as the heights of ceilings decrease and according to the density of the steam and gases. In some situations any calculation less than twice a minute will not give satisfactory results; the latter, of course, being rather exceptional. The best location for the fan is always in close relation to the point at which the fumes are created. A ventilating wheel or disc fan should be placed at one end of the building, rather than at the side, and as high up as possible. The relation of the source of air supply to the fan through the room is so important a matter that if improperly placed, the effectiveness of the ventilating wheel is often impaired to such an extent that it is practically valueless. There is always more or less complaint and disappointment of the results derived from fans, and which is due primarily to a lack of intelligence in their installation. To show by practical example: a foundryman recently ordered a large ventilating wheel, and of a size recommended by the manufacturer, also locating it as directed by him; the result was that the accumulation of fumes caused during the "pouring-off" period was relieved but little. Being unacquainted with fans, naturally the entire blame was thrown upon the fan and its manufacturer, when the real cause of the failure was due to the air supply to the fan being obtained nearly in its entirety from an open window not over ten feet away. When this was closed, and the air supply taken from the opposite end of the room, the difficulty was entirely overcome and the maximum efficiency of the machine obtained, to the satisfaction of both purchaser and seller. Exhausting from a foundry by means of a ventilating wheel or fan is always the better manner in which to accomplish the removal of vapors, steam, gases, etc. Blowing into an apartment of this character only serves to more evenly distribute the pollution of the atmosphere. No demonstration is needed to show that an exhaust wheel causes a partial vacuum or an exhaustive influence upon any inclosed space to which it is applied. By selecting one of proper size and regulating the source of the air supply from an opposite end of the building, discharging at the nearest convenient point from the fan, the greatest efficiency and the clearest atmosphere will be insured. The fan being located near to the dust and fume creating source, first acts upon it by sucking the air laden therewith, which place is taken by pure air from its point of entrance.

Another important feature is in getting the areas of the intakes much in excess of the area of the fan. The width and length of the building enter for consideration in determining this.

So far as the removal of gases, vapor and smoke are concerned, there is as much need of the foundry ventilating outfit being run during the winter as in the summer; yet it is seldom that fans are run at this period of the year on account of the attendant great reduction of the temperature in the rooms under the usual conditions of their application. This status of affairs should not exist, and the feature of reducing the temperature of the air too greatly may be overcome by the introduction of a tempering coil in the space through which the air is taken into the building. The air must be derived from a pure source, which usually means directly from the outside, and while exhaust steam can be used in a coil of this character, it is necessary that large areas for the drip be provided. By bringing the air in cold from out-doors, the condensation in the tempering coils will be rapid, and the amount of water therefrom large, necessitating its being promptly taken care of. Outside of the possibility of obstructing too much light, there is no objection to locating such a coil in front of windows, which should be opened while the fans are being run and closed afterwards. Tight and loose pulleys, so that the fans may be started and stopped instantly when desired, should invariably be employed in all ventilating outfits where it is not desirable to run the fans all the time.

In occasional cases, the introduction of two fans, instead of a single one, for the purpose of cooling and ventilating a foundry, will be found far more efficient than the employment of a single machine of the combined capacity of the two smaller ones. No greater mistake can be made than to attempt to economize in the original outlay by selecting too small a fan. In the first place, a small fan at a high speed, although it may move practically the same amount of air as the larger one at a lower velocity, is by no means as effective in accomplishing the uniform ventilation of a large area as the larger fan. There is great economy in the matter of power by also choosing the larger machine; this saving alone in time will more than counterbalance the extra initial cost.

Unless the location of a ventilating fan be at a high point, a heavy wire screen should be placed around it as a safeguard. This is not necessary because this type of fan is such a powerful exhaustor that it is liable to draw people into it; but the blades do not materially obstruct the light, and instances have come to my observation where cats have endeavored to pass through the space when the fan was running. The result is invariably a reduction to jelly of the cat and a complete wreck of the fan. With some of the lighter makes of fans, blades have often been broken out by rats passing through, and the suction at a high speed is often sufficient to draw people's clothing into it with frequent injurious results.

In the erection of disc or propeller fans, oftentimes the proper location of the fan requires the discharge to be facing directly toward the point from which emanates the prevailing winds. These are frequently so heavy that the effectiveness of this type of fan is entirely overcome; in fact, I have seen a disc wheel discharging at the west side of a building when the wind would be so strong as to very materially reduce its speed, and, in fact, drive the air which it was attempting to discharge, back into the building. This annoyance may be overcome by the use of a discharge pipe of the same diameter of the wheel or slightly increased, leading it upward, and with a very easy curve at the end pointing to the south or east.

Casting-cleaning Rooms.

Probably no situation exists where it is more difficult to maintain a pure atmosphere than in that department of the foundry where the tumbling barrels are located. The dust-laden air, if no provision is made for its escape, and in the absence of a constant new supply, grows thicker by the continual motion of the rattlers. Apply a ventilating fan of large size to such a room as this, run it at speed even in excess of that ordinarily required, provide ample areas for the supply of fresh air, and it is impossible to keep a tumbling room free from dust, for the reason that the dust is being generated at every turn of the tumbling barrels. This method of purifying the air should only be recommended as a last resort, and in the event of its not being feasible to apply a volume fan in conjunction with a piping system. Of course, it will very greatly relieve the situation, and make it fairly endurable for employes, but such an application cannot be counted a complete success.

The introduction and installation of the improved form of exhaust tumbling barrels, has marked a great advance in bettering the air in this department of foundries. It is only of late years that the exhaust tumbling barrels have come into vogue, though their principle of operation in connection with some special lines of manufacture can be traced back half a century. Reference is made to the employment of draughts of air in connection with the cleaning and brightening of metallic articles in a dry state, for the purpose of carrying away the dust as fast as the tumbling loosens it. The efficiency of the air arises from its power as it rushes into the barrels, in cutting the films of dirt that envelop the articles to be cleaned, and in removing them. This accomplished, and clean metal brought into contact with clean metal, brightness of surfaces soon follows. The fans which are effective for this purpose are of the pressure or positive volume type, and most generally have cast iron shells. They are of the exhaust pattern, having but one inlet either on the right or left side of the fan as required. Cast iron fans are not made in so large diameters as are frequently required, and therefore, when there are a quantity of barrels to be exhausted from through a system of piping, which cannot be handled by the larger sizes of cast-iron machines, steel plate fans are substituted. The shells of fans used for exhausting from tumbling barrels, whether steel plate or of cast-iron type, are constructed in the form of a scroll, constantly increased in its distance from the center as it approaches the outlet of the exhauster. Both these types of fans may be obtained in right or left hand styles with top or bottom discharge outlets. Open belts must invariably be employed for driving, and the selection of a special discharge and hand of fan will frequently be necessary in order to prevent a twisted belt. The disc or propeller fan is not at all suited for this work, for while it will move a much larger volume of air at a given horse-power, it is totally incapable of producing the heavy pressure required to exhaust the particles of metal and heavy dust produced by the rattlers. The employment of the exhaust tumbling barrels, aside from abating a nuisance to any establishment and preserving cleanliness and health in the room, is of further value in the way of economy of power and space, as a smaller number of barrels are required to do a given work of the old type. Leading foundrymen agree that also better work is done, and in a shorter time. Several excellent forms of exhaust tumbling barrels are now employed. A favorite one is known as the "Two-way exhaust barrel." It receives the air through slight openings in the joints, or through small perforations in the sides. In this type of barrel, the dirt is removed at both ends by being connected with the exhaust fan by means of piping. Another barrel is the oval or egg-shaped type, which connects only at one end to the pipe leading to the exhauster. Nearly all of the exhaust types of tumblers are not only a real economy, but they convert the tumbling-room from one of suffocation to one of comfort for the workmen, and their use should be strongly recommended.

Emery Wheels.

The successful removal of particles from emery wheels calls for not only a fan to handle air under heavy pressure, but for great skill in applying it. The reason that there are so many failures in the application of fans for this service is due primarily to a lack of intelligence and understanding as to how they should be installed. In reality, the majority of exhaust outfits from emery wheels are nothing more than apologies, and giving due consideration to the fact that there are thousands of fans to-day connected to emery wheels through piping systems, there are few really successful outfits. Principal among the causes of failure are the selection of too small a fan, running it at too low a speed, but greatest of all, is the hooding of the wheels. In nearly every large manufactory there are different kinds of work done on emery wheels, and the grinding is performed at various points on the wheel. In one department there may be a series of wheels which may all be hooded in a certain way, while those in another department, doing different work, require to be hooded and piped to the exhauster in an opposite manner, owing solely to the way in which the grinding is done upon the wheel. Heretofore the common practice has been invariably to locate the main pipe from the exhauster underneath the wheels, and to connect thereto by means of branches. Sometimes the results derived have been favorable, and at other times flat failures have ensued. It has been conclusively demonstrated in some instances where the grinding is done in such a manner that the particles are carried by the motion of the emery wheel upward, instead of downward, that the main pipe must be overhead instead of underneath. This calls for a great increase in the expenditure of power for driving the exhauster at the requisite high velocity to lift these particles, and far exceeds what would be necessary if the piping were placed downward; yet the hood cannot be so built and connected to the main pipe as to catch the refuse in the latter case, for the scheme has been tried time and time again. As previously intimated, the pressure or volume cast-iron exhausters are best suited for handling the refuse from emery and buffing wheels. Generally speaking, they should be run at a speed sufficient to produce a pressure of five ounces, which is equal to a velocity of 11,676 feet of air per minute for average work, and with the main piping underneath the wheel. Where the grinding is extra heavy, and the wheel is large, with the attendant result of the particles being heavier to move, the speed will have to be ample to produce a six to seven-ounce pressure. It will be readily understood that the speed of different sizes of fans to produce a certain pressure of air varies.

*Dust Removing Arrangement

Emery and Buffing Wheels.*

BUFFING BELT ARRANGEMENT.

For example: a small fan for seven-ounce pressure will run at high speed, while one twice its diameter at a material reduction of the speed will give the same velocity. This is due to the fact that in the former instance, the wheel is small and the velocity of air at its periphery, to be great, requires high speed. In the latter, the wheel is greater in diameter, and the peripheral velocity likewise increased. Where the main pipe is carried overhead with branches communicating to the emery wheels, and the particles are thereby all drawn upward, a speed will be necessary to give six-ounce to nine-ounce pressure, according to whether the work is light or heavy.

In determining the size of an exhaustor for emery wheel work the number and diameter of the wheels must be ascertained. The size of pipe for various emery wheels depends upon the size of the wheel; for instance, a wheel ten inches in diameter requires a two-inch round pipe; a wheel twelve to eighteen inches in diameter requires a four-inch round pipe, and a wheel eighteen to twenty-four inches requires a four-and-a-half-inch round pipe. The area of the main pipe leading to the exhaustor, will be governed by the combined areas of the branch openings, and it should be quite a little in excess of same, dependent upon the extent of space through which the material has to be carried. Reference is requested to the figures (Table II.) showing "necessary increase in diameter for different lengths of pipes," to the table of "friction of air in pipes," (Table III.) and also to the table showing the extra power required to force a given amount of air through different lengths of pipe, and the extra speed which must be provided for upon an exhaustor operating under such conditions (Table IV.), for all of which figures I am indebted to the catalogue of the Buffalo Forge Company, of Buffalo. When the main pipe has thus been determined, this will indicate the size of fan which should be employed, and an exhaustor with an inlet of equal diameter to that of the main pipe should be selected.

As previously indicated, the volume or pressure-exhaust fans are usually chosen for this work in preference to the steel plate exhaustors. The latter, however, are thoroughly efficient for such work, but should be built with their wheels and sides of heavier material than for ordinary planing-mill service, as the constant friction of the emery particles wears them out more quickly. Heavier gauges of iron should also be employed in piping layouts; and in making connections to the emery wheel hoods be sure that there are no low places in the pipes where the heavy dust can lodge. Many outfits work apparently well at first, but later on are complained of as being inefficient, when the trouble lies in their having become clogged. This is less liable to occur in the overhead system than when the main pipe is located underneath the wheel. In the latter case, periodic investigation should be made, and the pipes cleaned out wherever necessary. A curious and unpardonable blunder in piping up emery wheels frequently occurs. It is this: Instead of lapping the joints in the direction of the air toward the exhauster, they are sometimes put up directly opposite. An outfit thus erected will be clogged up more than half the time, for every joint of the pipe affords opportunity for the refuse to collect. No remarks can be made which can be followed as hard-and-fast rules regarding the arrangement and proportion of the hoods for all cases. Each particular situation requires study in its planning, and this should be placed in the hands of an expert. All emery and buffing wheel hoods must be of the adjustable sort, so that, as the wheels wear by constant grinding, the hoods may be contracted to fit closely as they decrease in size. When new wheels are put on the spindles, then they may be opened to full size again.

The installation of an exhaust fan for removing the dust from emery, buffing and polishing wheels, should not be undertaken by one having no previous knowledge of this class of work, especially if the plant be a large one, or at all intricate. Where there are only four or five wheels to hood, then the work can be satisfactorily done by an ordinary mechanic. Blast gates should invariably be employed at each wheel spindle or in every branch pipe, so that when not in use, they can be closed off and the suction at other openings increased. Accompanying this, will be found diagrams (figs. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5), showing various arrangements of adjustable hoods, slip joints and general layouts of exhaust fans applied to emery wheels, buffing wheels, etc., all of which are sufficiently explanatory in themselves. When a factory inspector issues an order for the installation of an exhauster, it certainly becomes him to strongly discourage the idea of what apparently seems economy to the owner by choosing too small a fan, or not consulting with those experienced in the installation of such outfits, and who are in a position to point out the way of obtaining thoroughly efficient results and reliable service from the fans employed.

Instances are frequent where the arrangement of emery wheels and location, with work performed thereon, are of such nature that two or more fans should, for effective results, be applied to the work, instead of attempting to handle the entire refuse by one exhauster. The reason for this will be readily appreciated when one stops to observe the fact that the grinding done on a certain set of wheels is of much lighter nature than the work performed on others. In a case like this, to be effectual for the heaviest work, the fan would have to be run at a very high rate of speed, and in fact, a speed far in excess of that actually required for the wheels where light work is being performed. Another argument in favor of the introduction of a number of fans is, that if the wheels were all connected to a single machine, it would involve an intricate layout of piping. An emery exhaust system is never effective excepting where the runs of piping are straight and direct, with very few bends or turns. It is impossible to obtain good service with even one abrupt bend or turn. Very easy curves alone can be tolerated, and these must be limited in number. One of the greatest annoyances which occurs in this work is the continual clogging up of the pipes, and nothing helps to cause such a result more than crooked piping arrangements. Further than this there is a great saving in power, and the cost of piping is reduced by choosing several fans for an emery department where the wheels are separated, and the work performed is of heavy and lighter character. Each fan will then be speeded and arranged according to the requirements of the sets of wheels from which it is to handle the particles.

Application of EMERY WHEEL & BUFFING WHEEL HOOD.

The discharge of dust from emery wheel exhausters is a subject which often perplexes greatly. In some lines of manufacture it must be saved, as particles of the very valuable material employed in the output are incorporated with the grindings from the wheel. There are two ways in which the saving of this refuse may be accomplished. The cheapest way, usually, is to employ a large vat of water, and lead the discharge pipe from the fan outlet to within a few inches of the water by means of an easy curve into the vat. The air discharged by the exhauster will naturally be directed downward toward the water, and as it comes in contact it will escape, while the material settles to the bottom of the tank and can be removed from time to time as it accumulates, afterward being dried, if necessary, before separating. Another way in which the same results may be secured is by the use of a dust separator. Generally speaking, however, it is not quite so satisfactory, for the reason that most dust separators are manufactured for planing-mill work, and are not nearly so effective as they should be. They seldom collect all the fine dust and particles, which is often a great necessity in preventing annoyance to the neighbors.

Rag Warehouses.

Probably in no single situation is there an accumulation of a wider variety of germs and filth than in these institutions. While shops of this character are not so frequent as other industries, it is, nevertheless, necessary that each be provided with ample ventilation, and by fans, if necessary, to the end of being on the safe side, using every precaution to prevent the distribution of disease germs and the odor from filth being breathed and assimilated into the system by employees.

In every carpet beating and cleaning room, feather renovating and other similar establishments, it is also imperative that fans be installed for the same service. The most frequent application is to employ a disc wheel or ventilating fan. Where the carpet beating and cleaning is done by machinery, their construction and arrangement most always is of such a nature that a steel plate exhauster in conjunction with a piping system, not unlike that employed for exhaust tumbling barrels in foundry rattling-rooms, can be introduced to greater advantage. Where this is not feasible, means of ridding the air of dust by disc wheels applied to the room to create a complete change of air at least once in two minutes should be used.

Closet Ventilation.

A necessary adjunct to every mercantile and manufacturing establishment are the closets for the use of the occupants, varying in number according to those employed and the extent of the business. Any remarks concerning the occasion or need for the ventilation of such apartments is entirely out of place. No person of ordinary sense will question the imperativeness for pure air in such cases, and there is not the least excuse for its not being supplied. Frequently the location of closets, especially in mercantile houses, is assigned to such a point that pure air can not be introduced directly from the outside. With the exercise of a little intelligence in installing the plant, the removal of the foul odors and purification of the air can, nevertheless, be readily accomplished. It is not frequent that the disc type of fan can be applied with advantage to this class of ventilating work. The requirements do not call for the removal of excessive quantities of air, for the apartments are usually small, but, on the other hand, a rapid change is indispensable to good results. Again, the gas and foul odors common to such apartments do not rise to the ceiling. The point at which the air should be taken from closets is directly over the urinals and seats. This opening must communicate to an exhauster of the volume or steel-plate type, which should preferably discharge into a chimney flue. If this is not feasible, the air may be carried by an upward pipe either inside or outside of the building to the top, or at a point sufficiently high that the discharge of the foul gases will not be annoying to other people.

Installed after the manner above briefly outlined, the air, instead of being laden with impurities, as it is invariably in closets where fans are not employed for ventilation, will be pure and wholesome. In my opinion, it is but a question of time when the minds of the majority of proprietors of dry-goods and mercantile business houses in every city will be convinced of the advisability of providing pure air in sufficient volume for the proper comfort of their employes, though it may not come from a humanitarian standpoint. It will result in a greater attractiveness of the place to customers, and save much of the time lost by clerks on account of sickness, directly caused by poor ventilation and bad air. If the public at large could fully appreciate that heating and ventilating are both necessary, and that they should go hand in hand, our mercantile buildings would be arranged and equipped widely different from what they now are. The "fan" system of heating and ventilating, or "blower" system, as it is sometimes called, possesses merits for such situations far exceeding those of any other method. The ventilating and heating is accomplished at the same time, being combined in one apparatus, large fans and steam coils being employed, which are concentrated at a given point, usually in the basement of the building. The construction of most apparatus is also of such character that the ventilation may always be accomplished and the air kept at a mild and healthful degree of comfort at all times. The latter result is obtained by the ability to perfectly regulate the amount of heating surface, as required by the natural outside temperature, and even to such an extent that it may be entirely closed off during the summer and the fan run for ventilating and cooling only. An entire paper upon this subject and the application of this system to manufacturing establishments of all classes, as well as to buildings used for mercantile purposes, could profitably form the subject of a paper to be presented at a future meeting.

Woodworking Establishments.

As the introduction of steel-plate exhaust fans of the type commonly known as "planing-mill exhausters" has become so general in the larger mills, but few remarks upon the subject are in order. Like all other machinery, the proprietor is glad to adopt what is going to tend most directly to increase the fatness of his purse. The great economy in the removal of shavings, sawdust and chips by the use of a fan, instead of performing it by hand, is recognized at once. The saving does not end at this point. By the use of a separator in conjunction with a fan, and a proper arrangement of branch pipes with dampers automatically adjusted for feeding the boilers, the entire refuse drawn in by the fan can be deposited into the boilers and used for fuel. The plant, as usually placed, also provides for depositing the shavings into a bin or shaving-house convenient to the boiler-room by means of a branch pipe from the separator, when the woodworking machinery is producing more refuse than the boiler fires will burn. This latter feature is a very convenient and desirable one. When properly erected, a planing-mill exhaust outfit will not only decrease the fire risk, but has other meritorious features as well in the way of incidentally accomplishing, to a certain extent, ventilation in such apartments which otherwise would not be provided for in any way. Some planing-mills are thus incidentally better ventilated and cooled in summer than many elegantly equipped banks or other of the better classes of mercantile houses, and we may also include the engine rooms of street railway and other power-houses, which are invariably intended to be an attractive feature of the premises. Aside from properly hooding woodworking machinery, there is little to be desired in the application of fans excepting to get the sizes of pipes adjusted rightly.

Miscellaneous.

It has been impossible in this paper, to cover all situations requiring ventilation which come under the attention of the factory inspector. There are candy manufactories where fans should be installed in conjunction with systems of piping and hoods over the boiling kettles, etc., after the same general arrangement employed in forge shops for removing the gases and smoke from the fires, and also for cooling the atmosphere. In glue manufactories, the odors arising from the skins and processes of perfecting the product also render it very opportune that ventilation and pure air should be provided. In steam laundries, where there are so many operators, it is particularly necessary that fans should be employed for the exhausting of steam, hot air and all the offensive odors common to the apartments containing the washing, dampening, wringing and similar machinery. For removing the steam and heat in paper mills by means of a large oiled canvas hood over various machinery, fans are also of great service, and in cooling in hot weather the room and preventing dripping from the ceiling by condensation of the steam in winter. Of course, in all cases outlined above, and in the hundreds of others found in and peculiar to various industrial establishments, the fan type which will most effectually serve is governed by the conditions met. The whole subject merits minute study on the part of factory inspectors.

* It will be seen by reference to the above table that the diameter of pipe for transmitting or carrying air from one point to another changes with the length or distance which the air is carried from the blower to the furnace, or other point of delivery. As air moves through pipes, a portion of its force is retarded by the friction of its particles along the sides of the pipe, and the loss of pressure from this source increases directly as the length of the pipe and the square of the velocity of the moving air. This fact has long been known, and many experimenters and engineers, by close observation and long continued experiments, have established formulæ by which the loss of pressure and the additional amount of power required to force air or gases through pipes of any length and diameter may be computed. As these formulæ are commonly expressed in algebraic notation, not in general use, it has been thought desirable to arrange a table showing at a glance all the necessary proportionate increase in diameter and length of blast pipes and conical mouth-pieces in keeping up the pressure to the point of delivery. It is often the case that where a blower is condemned as being inefficient, the cause of its failure is that the pipe connections are too small for their lengths, coupled with a large number of short bends, without regard to making the pipe tight, which is a necessity. The table given, showing the necessary increase in the size of pipes in proportion to the lengths, is a practical one.

Table exhibiting horse-power and pressure required to overcome friction of air passing through pipes.

By comparison, it will be observed that, should it be desirable to convey 100 feet of air through a pipe 3 inches in diameter, it must have a velocity of 2,000 feet per minute (this losing 1.5 ozs of pressure in friction) whereas if this same volume of air is transmitted through a pipe 9 inches in diameter, it requires a velocity of only 227 feet per minute accompanied by a loss of friction of .005 ozs. The horse-power expended in the former and latter is as .0397 to 1 to .0001, or 397 to 1 in favor of the latter. The advantage in choosing a larger diameter of pipe is clearly apparent. Pipes of different lengths than those enumerated are subject to the same relations. It will also be observed that, in forcing air through a 3 ft 6 in diameter pipe under a velocity of 2,000 feet per minute, the resultant air back pressure is equal to 1.5 ozs. These tables have been calculated for a pipe 100 feet long, for lengths exceeding this, multiply the numbers in the table by the ratio of the increase in length of pipes, for example a pipe 500 feet long x 5, 300 feet long x 3, 400 feet long x 4, etc. The differences of temperature between the ends of the pipes, if any, should be taken into consideration, but no allowance of this nature has been provided for in the table. All losses given in table should be provided for by increased speed on the blower, likewise requiring additional power.

GUARDING MACHINERY, ETC.

It will no doubt always be an important part of a factory inspector's duties to look after the guarding of machinery. It seems that no matter how frequently some establishments containing much machinery are visited, the suggestion of new dangers will arise at each inspection, or an accident will happen in a previously unheard-of way, the recurrence of which must be guarded against. It may be stated, however, that the manufacturers are now, as a rule, careful to place guards around the gearing and exposed parts of machinery made by them, and thus save the necessity of afterward overhauling them by order of the factory inspectors. It would be a decided advantage if the makers of saw tables, molding tables, shapers, etc., would adopt some plan of guards for such machinery, and supply the guards with them at the time of sale, so that their dangers would to a great extent be avoided from the beginning, and the delay, annoyance, and oftentimes imperfect workmanship in attaching safeguards after the machines have been set up, would be obviated. Herewith are submitted some drawings of saw-guards taken from the "Collection of Safeguards and Apparatus for the Prevention of Accidents on Machines," published by the Society for the Prevention of Accidents in Factories (H. Stuckelberger: Mulhouse, Alsace, Germany; 1889).

CASING FOR SAW UNDER BENCH.

To prevent accidents arising from contact with the saw under the bench, as, for instance, during the removal of sawdust, the blade is incased in boards or protected by doors of wood or sheet iron, which reach deeper down than the largest timber to be dealt with:

FIG. 6.

FIG. 7.

In figures 6 and 7 a safety board (B) is represented, which is intended for an underneath guard to a saw that can only be reached from one side. If the saw should be approachable from both, then two of such boards are used.

SAFETY BOARD AGAINST SPLINTERS.

This board (figures 8 and 9) is fastened, according to circumstances, either to a hanging beam (B) or to a lateral support by means of a bolt (S) and a fly nut, and can be displaced vertically by the aid of the slot (C). This appliance is recommended only in cases where the safety hood can not be applied, either because the dimensions of the timber or of the saw blades vary considerably, or even because the timber, owing to its size, can not be lifted up.

SAFETY HOODS.

A safety hood should fulfill the following conditions :

1. The workman must not be prevented from seeing the working points of the teeth or following the course of the saw cut.
2. It should be attached in such a manner that the bench remains exposed as far as possible, so that work may not be interfered with.
3. It should satisfactorily resist any longitudinal or transverse thrust or pressure.
4. It should permit the workman to keep almost continually at work, and should not have to be lifted or taken completely away.

FIXED SAFETY HOODS.

For the sawing of thin boards, with saw blades varying but little, it will suffice to fix a vaulted tin piece (T), (figures 10 and 11), about an inch and a half wide over the saw and carried by the flat iron (B), which is bent to an angle and screwed down to the bench at a considerable distance from the blade.

When the thickness of the timber varies but little a movable beak (D) with slot (E) (figures 12 and 13), is attached to the front of the hood. This hood is connected with the riving knife and with the rod (A) that is fastened to the wall by means of an eye (a).

In the case of small saws it is sufficient to cover the blade (figures 14 and 15) with a small board (B), which is connected with the rigid piece (A) by means of hinge-joints (C C) and is secured by the bolts (P P) and fly nuts.

FIG. 14.

SAFETY HOODS MOVABLE BY HAND.

One of the best systems consists of a hood (B) of wood (figures 16 and 17), or better still, of sheet iron and wire netting (figure 18), which is connected with the hanging-beam (D) or a support fastened to the bench by means of a lath or a flat iron (T) with a slot. The curve (B) of the hood terminates an inch or two above the lower edge of the surface (B), the latter being perforated so as to light up the teeth. The hood is balanced by the counterpoise (Q) and can be held up at any desired height by means of the bolts (P) with fly-nut.

HOODS WITH AUTOMATIC LIFTING MOTION.

The Nardin appliance (figures 21 and 22) consists of two hoods (C and D), which are hung upon the pivots (C and D) of the shoulders (E and F) that are movable vertically. The hood (C) which carries the beak (H) lifted by the timber, takes the hood (D) with it through the agency of a finger fastened to the pivot c; the pivot d has a similar projection, yet c can drop down without taking (D) with it. The cast-iron segments (X) of the hoods are provided with perforations (S) which admit of the saw cut being watched, and with a slit through which the riving-knife (R) enters.

THE MANUFACTURE OF GOODS IN TENEMENTS, DWELLINGS AND REAR BUILDINGS.

The regulations concerning the manufacture of clothing, cigars, cigarettes, artificial flowers and feathers, in tenements, dwellings and rear buildings have been vigorously and effectively enforced during the year, especially since the amendments to the law passed by the Legislature of 1893 went into effect. The business depression which has existed during the latter half of the year, however, materially reduced the abuses existing, because there being less activity in these trades, the incentive to overcrowd work-rooms was largely curtailed. The hard times have been especially severe upon the people engaged in these industries, not only in shutting out thousands from employment, but in creating greater competition among the workers for the privilege of making up the comparatively light amount of goods which was manufactured. The wages paid this class of producers was notoriously small and inadequate under the best of conditions, but the panic has been the excuse to still further reduce them. Their pay has been cut from twenty to forty per cent. and the difficulty of keeping soul and body together upon the now meagre returns for their labor can readily be imagined. It is not to be expected that when business revives, the persons who employ these people will voluntarily increase their pay, and they are not organized sufficiently to enforce a return to even the old pitiful rate of wages. It will require extra vigilance to prevent the sweating system, as it relates to the law, from becoming worse than ever.

The tables of inspection herewith submitted will show that in the city of New York since the passage of the so-called "anti-sweating law," there have been erected fifty-nine factory buildings, containing 483 separate shops, on the sites of tenements formerly swarming with people engaged in the making of clothing in bedrooms and kitchens; 371 tenements have been cleared entirely of "sweaters" and are now used only for living purposes, and eighty-five tenements have been cleared of residents and remodeled into shop buildings. In the aggregate this has improved the conditions under which 17,147 people manufacture clothing in the city of New York. This has been accomplished during a time when dullness in business had for the most part checked building operations generally, and when slackness in the clothing trade had restricted the necessity for workshops of any description. It can, therefore, be confidently asserted, that with the revival of business and consequent increased demand for separate workshops the building of structures intended exclusively for clothing workshops will be greatly stimulated, especially as it is understood that the law will no longer permit the use of tenements or dwellings for this class of manufacturing. Following is a table (V) showing the workshop buildings, by street numbers, erected during the year upon sites formerly occupied by "sweater" tenements, and which were cleared by orders of the factory inspectors:

The authority given the inspectors to tag the goods made in unclean or unhealthy places, or where the law is violated, has had a markedly beneficial effect, and the simple threat to exercise this power has accomplished reforms which even the arrest and conviction of the parties could not. A notice that the goods made in any particular place would be tagged with the label "Tenement Made" after a certain date, if the premises were not vacated or made to conform to the law, when served upon the owner of the material, invariably resulted in prompt obedience to the inspector's orders. No more effective aid to the inspectors in attacking some of the features of the sweating evil could be devised.

Herewith is shown a delineation of the tag. The words "Tenement Made" are printed in red ink. The O represents an eyelet to be used if the goods are of such character as to require the tying on of the label, but it is printed on stiff linen paper, so that it can be sewed upon clothing. Before attaching this label the following blank is filled out and sent to the owner of the material found on the premises, should the case not require immediate tagging:

Factory Inspector.

The overcrowding of work-rooms was a very frequent offense during the early part of the year, but of late we have seen none of it. No doubt the dullness of trade has had a great deal to do with this improvement. The general features and abominations of the sweating system have been so often described that further detailed discussion of the subject in this report is unnecessary. It is sufficient to say that, with a few minor amendments, the present law will in time, by vigorous enforcement, prevent the continuance of all its worst features excepting one, and that is the low wages paid, with which the Legislature can not well deal.

THE WEEKLY PAYMENT LAW.

AN ACT to provide for the weekly payment of wages by corporations.

AMENDMENTS APPROVED by the Governor, May 17, 1893. Passed, three-fifths being present.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows :

SECTION 1. Every manufacturing, mining, quarrying, lumbering, mercantile, railroad other than a steam surface railroad, steamboat, telegraph, telephone and municipal corporation or joint-stock company, and every incorporated or joint-stock express or water company, shall pay weekly to each of its employes the wages earned by such employe to within six days of the date of such payment unless any such employe shall be absent from his regular place of labor at the usual time of payment, in which case payment shall be made at any reasonable time thereafter upon demand. Whenever any such joint-stock company or corporation shall contract or lease its plant, works or business, to an agent or other person to conduct the same, and to turn over the product or receipts thereof to such joint-stock company or corporation, it shall be and it is hereby made a condition of such contract or lease that the agent or person so contracting or leasing the plant, works or business of such corporation or joint-stock company shall pay in cash weekly the wages earned by persons engaged by him to work in and about such plant, works or business, the same as if such persons were employed directly by such corporation or joint-stock company.

§ 2. Any joint-stock company or corporation violating any of the provisions of this act shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars and not less than ten dollars for each violation, to be paid to the people of the State, and which may be recovered in a civil action; provided an action for such violation is commenced within thirty days from the date thereof. The Factory Inspectors of this State, their assistants or deputies may bring an action in the name of the people of the State as plaintiffs against any joint-stock company or corporation which neglects to comply with the provisions of this act for a period of two weeks, after having been notified in writing by such inspectors, assistants or deputies, that such action will be brought. On the trial of such action such joint-stock company or corporation shall not be allowed to set up any defense for a failure to pay weekly any employe engaged in its business, the wages earned by such employe to within six days of the date of such payment other than a valid assignment of such wages or a valid set-off against the same, or the absence of such employe from his regular place of labor at the time of payment, or an actual tender to such employe at the time of payment, of the wages so earned by him, or a breach of contract by such employe, or a denial of the employment. No assignment of future wages, payable weekly, under the provisions of this act shall be valid if made to the corporation or joint-stock company from which such wages are to become due, or to any person on behalf of such joint-stock company or corporation, or if made or procured to be made to any person for the purpose of relieving such joint-stock company or corporation from the obligation to pay weekly under the provisions of this act. Charges for groceries, provisions or clothing shall not be made a valid offset for wages, nor shall any such corporation or joint-stock company require as a condition of employment any agreement from any employe to accept wages at other periods than as provided in section one of this act. Any person, acting as the agent or lessee of a corporation or joint-stock company, and operating its plant, works or business and disposing of the products thereof chiefly or solely to such corporation or joint-stock company, who shall violate the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than fifty dollars.

§ 3. The provisions of sections two hundred and sixty-three and three hundred and eighty-four of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to and govern any proceedings brought to enforce the provisions of this act, as against joint-stock companies or corporations, and it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General of this State to appear in behalf of such proceedings brought hereunder by the Factory Inspectors of this State, their assistants or deputies.

§ 4. This act shall take effect immediately.—Chapter 388, Laws of 1890, as amended by chapter 717 of the Laws of 1893.

A number of instances of violation of the foregoing act were called to the notice of the Factory Inspector and received prompt attention. Perhaps the most notable of these was that of the Western Union Telegraph Company, which had conformed to the law from and after its passage in 1890 until about September of the past year. This company, acting under a decision of the Supreme Court of Illinois, which had declared unconstitutional the Weekly Payment Law of that State, returned to the semi-monthly system of payment, but after some correspondence and a conference with the inspectors, the company again adopted the weekly payment system, much to the satisfaction of its thousands of employes in this State.

When this report was closed last year there were pending suits against certain corporations doing business in the northern part of the State which had neglected and refused to obey the law, the Shanley & Alfred Lumber Company, a foreign corporation doing business in Franklin county, and the Crown Point Iron Company and the Chateaugay Ore and Iron Company, mining corporations doing business respectively in Essex and Clinton counties.

Early in 1892, with the aid of Messrs. Foley & Wing, of Saratoga Springs, who were designated as special counsel by the Attorney-General, we began a vigorous prosecution of these corporations under the law, in the Supreme Court, in the name of the people, to recover penalties for violations of the law. Various defenses were interposed, including the assignment of wages by the employes in advance of their earning the same; agreement of the employes made before the law went into effect to accept monthly wages instead of weekly wages; the furnishing of goods at a company store (pleaded as an advance payment of wages), resulting in the fact that no wages were due employes at the end of any week; the unconstitutionality of the law as impairing the obligation of contracts, etc.

Able counsel were employed by the corporations, including the firm of Weed, Smith & Conway, of Plattsburgh; Hon. J. P. Badger, of Malone, and J. W. Webb, of St. Regis Falls. The cases against the Chateaugay Ore and Iron Company, and the Crown Point Iron Company were to have been tried during the spring term of the Supreme Court at Saratoga, but the corporations offered to settle before a trial was had, and did so by paying $200 each into the State treasury and stipulating that after June 1st they would pay their employes weekly. This ends all the cases so far brought against corporations by the Factory Inspector, and from the fact that such powerful concerns as those above mentioned were glad to settle without a contest in the courts, it is believed that the validity of the law cannot be successfully attacked.

Notices of suit have been served upon a salt company in the interior of the State, but this company may comply without any actual suit being commenced.

THE APPRENTICESHIP LAW.

Chapter 934, Laws of 1871.

AN ACT in reference to apprentices and employes.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. On and after the passage of this act, it shall not be lawful for any person or persons in this State to employ or take as an apprentice any minor person to learn the art or mystery of any trade or craft without first having obtained the consent of such person's legal guardian or guardians; nor shall any minor person be taken as an apprentice aforesaid unless an agreement or indenture be drawn up in writing, in accordance with the provisions of this act, and duly executed under seal by the person or persons employing said apprentice, and also by the parents or parent, if any be living, or by the guardian or guardians of said apprentice, and likewise by said minor persons so becoming an apprentice.

§ 2. Said agreement or indenture, in order to make the law valid, shall contain the following covenants and provisions:

1. That said minor person shall be bound to serve his employer or employers for a term of not less than three nor more than five years.

2. That said minor person so indentured shall not leave his said employer or employers during the term for which he shall be indentured, and if any said apprentice so indentured as aforesaid shall leave his said employer or employers, except as hereinafter provided, the said employer or employers may compel the return of the said apprentice under the penalties of this act.

3. That said employer or employers shall covenant and agree in said indenture to provide, at all times during the continuance of the same, suitable and proper board, lodging and medical attendance for said apprentice, and said employer or employers shall also further covenant and agree to teach or cause to be carefully and skillfully taught to his or their said apprentice every branch of his or their business to which said apprentice may be indentured, and said employer or employers shall be further bound, at the expiration of said apprenticeship, to give to said apprentice a certificate in writing stating that said apprentice has served a full term of apprenticeship of not less than three nor more than five years at such trade or craft as may be specified in said indenture.

§ 3. Any person or persons taking an apprentice without complying with the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in the court of sessions of general or special sessions, held in and for the county in which the business of said employer or employers may be conducted, shall be subject to a fine of not less than $500, the fine to be paid to the treasurer of said county, for the use and benefit of said county.

§ 4. Any and all indentures made under and in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall not be canceled or annulled before the expiration of the term of said indentures, except in case of death; or by the order of or judgment of the county or supreme court of this state for good cause, and any apprentice so indentured who shall leave his employer or employers without his or their consent, or without sufficient cause, and shall refuse to return, may be arrested upon the complaint of said employer or employers and taken before any magistrate having jurisdiction of misdemeanors, who may cancel said indentures, and on conviction may commit said apprentice to the house of correction, house of refuge or county jail, in and for said county, for such length of time as such magistrate may deem just, or until said apprentice shall have attained the age of twenty-one years, and in case said apprentice, so indentured, shall willfully neglect or refuse to perform his portion of the contract as specified in said indenture, then said indenture may be canceled in the manner aforesaid, and said apprentice so violating said indentures shall forfeit all back pay and all claims against said employer or employers, and said indentures shall be canceled.

§ 5. Should any employer or employers neglect or refuse to teach, or cause to be taught to said apprentice the art or mystery of the trade or craft to which said apprentice has been indentured, or fail at any time to provide suitable and proper board, lodging and medical attendance, said apprentice, individually, or his parent or parents, guardian or guardians, may bring an action against said employer or employers, to recover damages sustained by reason of said neglect or refusal; and if proved, to the satisfaction of the court, said court shall direct said indentures to be canceled, and may impose a fine on said employer or employers, not exceeding $1,000, and not less than $100, and said fine shall be collected and paid over to said apprentice or his parent or guardian, for his sole use and benefit.

§ 6. Any indenture made and executed, wherein parts conflict with, or are not in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be invalid, and without any binding effect.

§ 7. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Chapter 437, Laws of 1888.

AN ACT to amend section three of chapter nine hundred and thirty-four of the laws of eighteen hundred and seventy-one, entitled "An act in reference to apprentices and employers."

APPROVED by the Governor May 29, 1888. Passed, three-fifths being present.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. Section three of chapter nine hundred and thirty-four of the laws of eighteen hundred and seventy-one, entitled "An act in reference to apprentices and employers," is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

§ 3. Any person or persons taking an apprentice without complying with the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof before any magistrate or court having jurisdiction, held in the county in which the business of said employer or employers may be conducted, shall be subject to a fine of not less than five hundred dollars, the fine to be paid to the treasurer of the said county, for the use and benefit of said county. It shall be the duty of the factory inspector and the deputy factory inspectors to see to it that the duties and obligations of employers to their apprentices are observed and enforced, to enforce this act, and to prosecute such employers for a failure to perform such duties and obligations, or any violation of this act.

We have no progress to report with reference to the enforcement of the Apprenticeship Law, and no complaint of its violation came to us during the year. It is submitted that the purpose of this statute is a good one, but it has evidently been copied from some law of ancient times when the social and industrial conditions were different from those of to-day. There are instances to our knowledge where apprentices are indentured, and they and their employers are living in good faith up to the terms of their mutual agreement, but the employers are violating the terms and requirements of the foregoing statute in that they do not agree to provide "board, lodging and medical attendance" for their apprentices, nor do the apprentices or their parents ask or expect them so to do, yet there is a clear violation of the law in the failure to have such stipulations in the articles of indenture. It seems to us that if this law were amended so as to make it conform more nearly to the usages and customs of these days it would accomplish some good, and might then encourage the apprenticeship system; but as it stands it is a decided detriment to all concerned and hurts nobody more than the would-be apprentice.

P A P E R S .

Acting President John Franey delivered the annual address, after calling the convention to order, as follows :

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

Ladies and gentlemen of the convention: The duty of calling this convention to order devolves upon me because of the resignation of the president elected at our meeting in Hartford last year. In so doing I may be permitted to express the mutual pleasure which we all feel in renewing the acquaintance made in these annual gatherings during the year past, and in welcoming to our conference those who, through the mutations of our American system of politics, or because of the passage of new inspection laws, are now for the first time taking part in our deliberations. It does not detract from the public value of these annual gatherings that they have given rise to lasting friendships and developed an appreciation of the good personal qualities of acquaintances who for the greater part of the year are widely separated and pursuing their respective duties in distant commonwealths. It is with no less regret, however, that as our eyes wander over the faces of those present, and fail to note among the familiar ones a few which we have been accustomed to see in our gatherings heretofore, we regretfully recall the frailties of nature and the iron logic of events which has caused changes to be made in the personnel of the inspection departments of some of the States. It is a satisfaction to know, however, notwithstanding the passing of individuals, that the progress in material legislation in the direction of improving some factory laws and enacting others has gone steadily on, and I am happy to say that in this direction our convention at Hartford last year was not without its beneficial influence. Pennsylvania has since then increased her force of inspectors and improved her original factory law in important respects; Ohio has advanced another long step in the purpose of protecting her toilers in mills and factories; New York has further strengthened the hands of her inspectors in their efforts to curtail the evils of the sweating system; New Jersey has reduced the legal number of hours of labor for women and minors in mills and factories to fifty-four per week, and the great State of Illinois has fallen into line and created an inspection department to enforce new and stringent factory regulations. There has been no step backward in any State. All new legislation has been formed upon lines endorsed by the experience of the inspectors and modelled upon the acts of the most progressive States.

The good results that have flown from these conventions have been manifold. They have stirred to emulation those of the States which were without legal restrictions of any kind in the conduct of their industrial pursuits, and by this indifference not only permitted the artisan elements of their populations to suffer various ills, dangers and annoyances from foul atmosphere, dangerous machinery, defective toilet facilities and long hours of labor, the results of crude knowledge of factory and mechanical construction or the grasping tendencies of unscrupulous employers, but by a fear of befriending too much the humble laborer and workman, their statemen withhold from the manufacturer the benefits of wise laws which experience has shown have improved the product of the mills in quality and quantity, in the same ratio as beneficent factory legislation has been applied. While thus educating the law-makers of the country and tending to equalize the statutes of the different commonwealths, the papers which are read at these conventions and the discussions which follow their reading, the comparison of experiences, the practical demonstration of applied invention, and new discoveries, go far to fit the inspectors present for a better and more efficient performance of their duties, and broaden the scope of their knowledge of proper factory inspection beyond the official requirements of their own States. This increase of information is especially of benefit where the law does not as yet embrace all subjects usually understood to be within the domain of an inspector's duties. It is the experience of all of the factory departments, that with the majority of employers it is only necessary to suggest an improvement in existing conditions to have it properly attended to, and in this way without the compulsion of law many reforms have been accomplished. The law follows later for application to those of unfriendly or unwilling disposition, and then the inspector is prepared to suggest, with the certainty that his suggestions will be followed, those changes which formerly he found it useless to advise. It is also necessary to hold meetings of the inspectors of each State from time to time, in order that a uniform system of inspection may be carried out. In this way a thorough understanding of the law, as practically applied, will be disseminated and fewer mistakes will occur.

I will not detain the convention with any further comment upon the purpose of our meeting, and I, therefore, conclude, with the hope that in conjunction with our duties here, advantage will be taken of the opportunity which this city affords to enlighten and aid us in the wonderful display of the world's products and man's achievements at the great Exposition now being held in this city.

Mrs. Florence Kelly, of Illinois, being called, read a paper as follows:

FACTORY LEGISLATION IN ILLINOIS.

Factory legislation in Illinois is still in the earliest experimental stages, the law creating the office of State inspector having been passed by the latest legislature and signed by Governor Altgeld in June of the present year.

The Illinois Factory and Workshop Inspection Law is a sanitary measure. It has no educational feature such as characterize the law of New York, nor does it aim to guard the employe from death by fire or from mutilation by unguarded machinery, as do the laws of several eastern States.

The first three paragraphs of the law are designed to protect the community from the infection which is an inevitable accompaniment of the manufacture of clothing under the sweating system.

The subsequent body of the law aims to protect in some measure the health of the women and children employed in all forms of manufacture.

The legislators who framed the Illinois factory law examined the tag and license provisions of the Massachusetts and New York laws and decided to follow the instinct of the sweater victims, who assured them that a more effective measure would be found in the eight hours' section. The argument is simple, to the effect that a sweater's shop is a small group of workers, and no one can extort enough profit out of them in eight hours per day to make the shop pay. It takes the 14, 16, 18 hours-day to make the sweaters' shop pay. Hence, the enforcement of this clause must lead to large shops, with large groups of eight-hour employees. But such shops would not be sweater's shops, and the clothing trade would thus be placed on a level with the regular factory trades. For no large group of workers ever submit to the unsanitary conditions which are accepted as inevitable by feeble groups largely composed of children.

It is characteristic of Illinois that the enormous manufacture of the State have grown up so suddenly that the working class has had little time for study of the situation. So that thousands of children have come to be employed with a recklessness now outgrown in other communities, and under conditions which would not be tolerated in Massachusetts or New York. And many a corporation, which in its New York factory guards its machinery, discharges its illiterate boys and girls and obeys the ten-hour law, all in compliance with the New York labor code, has been working unlimited hours with women and tiny children in Illinois, unrestrained by any law whatever.

This last year a respectable working girl of my acquaintance was assaulted almost on her own doorstep as she was returning from work in one of the foremost book establishments of Chicago, having worked from 7 a. m. to 11.30 p. m.

The class of little children whom I taught in the Polk street night school last winter, was made up of Italian boys and girls, 10, 11 and 12 years old, children so wholly illiterate that they were struggling with the bats, cats and rats in the opening pages of the primer. In November and December a large number of them left the night school because the candy factory in which they spent their days began to work overtime, and my pupils worked in it from 7 a. m. to 9 p. m. with a half hour for dinner and no supper, a working week of eighty-two hours. I used to see them going home long after night school closed at 9 o'clock.

Under the new law such outrages as these upon the health and welfare of women and children are prohibited by the eight hour section, and it is again characteristic of Illinois her people that who had taken no action for so long a time, when the time for their action came, went farther and passed a more searching law than adorns the statute books of any other State.

For not only does the new law provide for destroying infectious garments, for limiting the age of child workers and thoroughly inspecting home and shop and factory; it also limits to eight hours per day and forty-eight hours per week the working time of every female of whatever age in every factory and workshop in the State.

Construing the law as a sanitary measure, it becomes the first duty of the inspectors to ascertain in what trades women and children are employed, and to give immediate attention to the more injurious of these. Accordingly, the manufacturers of clothing, candy, paper boxes, tobacco, cigars and crackers, and the wood-working and stamping trades were thoroughly canvassed.

Especially injurious to the health is the running of sewing machines by foot-power in the clothing trades. This so exhausts men that I have never found a man 40 years of age who was able to maintain the pace required. How much worse must it be for growing girls! Yet there were, last year, hundreds of girls between 12 and 16 years of age, employed in this way, some of them working fourteen to eighteen hours a day in the hottest months of summer.

Not only does the new law reduce to eight the hours of daily work of these unfortunate children, it further provides for winnowing out the more delicate of them by requiring a physician's certificate, and prohibiting the employment of any child who can not obtain one.

If the medical profession will do its duty, examining both the occupation and the child before granting the certificate, the standard of health of employes in a dozen trades will be vastly improved during the present year.

A valuable result of the new law already to some extent attained, is the greater uniformity of work and rest insured to girls and women. Formerly the custom prevailed of working overtime in many trades during a part of the year, and then closing the factory outright or working three or four very long days a week. This irregularity is one of the most cruelly demoralizing experiences of the working girls' life, injurious alike to health and to every habit of thrift and persevering effort. The regulation of the hours of work inevitably tends to distribute work over the year, and so to assure greater stability of occupation. This must prove especially beneficent in the clothing trades in which the long wearing days have come at midsummer, and the enforced idleness and privation at midwinter, when they were hardest to bear and most costly in vitality.

In many cases the shortening of the day has been in the morning, so that women and children who have had a long walk or ride before reaching the factory at seven o'clock, now sleep an hour later and reach their work at eight. The mother of the family, who rises still earlier to cook the breakfast and put up the lunch, also profits by this added hour of rest.

The vital clause of the laws is, of course, this eight hours section. This makes it a matter of trade union principle for every union man and woman in Illinois to report at once every infraction of the law, and the unions have been found invaluable aids in enforcing this section.

The work of the inspectors has hitherto been chiefly by way of making known the law, no previous measure having paved the way for it. Much explanation is needed everywhere before the affidavits required for children between 14 and 16 are made, filed, recorded on the work-room walls, registered in the office and deposited in the office where the inspector can find them on demand. Much argument and persuasion are requisite before the eight hours placards are duly posted, and often a factory must be watched for days before the firm decides that the inspector means what he says and the law must be obeyed.

However, two months' patient work have borne fruit in several ways. There is now a large body of honorable employers who are complying with the law in good faith, and a large and rapidly growing body of girls who not only obey the law and value it, but work as volunteers, making known its provisions and urging upon all their acquaintances the duty of co-operation with the inspectors, by insisting that the eight hours limit shall be observed.

Open defiance of the law is confined to a few metal stamping and woodworking firms, reinforced by the leading cracker bakers and those notorious pillars of the sweating system, the millionaire merchants of the Chicago clothing trades.

Before engaging time and energies in prosecuting these, it has seemed wiser to enlist the ready support of a number of law-abiding employers and to afford time for a body of wage earners to experience the advantage of the eight hours working day. It was necessary also, to obtain adequate evidence and assure myself of sufficient numbers of witnesses before asking the courts to condemn these offenders under the new law.

The intentional, determined law breakers are now thoroughly ascertained, and the difficulties in the way of legal proceedings are, I believe, obviated, so that it is now my intention to take steps at an early day for the enforcement of the eight hours clause in the few cases in which it is persistently violated.

The eight hour section of the Illinois factory law is one link in a chain of measures which have been adopted during a long series of years in many countries and in several States of our own Union, all recognizing the principle involved in a restriction of the hours of work of women.

Since England set the example in 1848 of a legal ten hours working day for women, and Australia, followed with the eight hours day for men and women, Germany has adopted a day of nine and a half hours effective work (eleven hours minus one for dinner and one-half for supper). Massachusetts the fifty-eight hours week and New Jersey the week of fifty-five hours.

In view of the widespread movement and the variation of the length of the working day, the question whether the week shall consist of sixty hours, or of fifty-nine as in Germany, fifty-eight as in Massachusetts, fifty-six as in England, fifty-five as in New Jersey, or forty-eight as in Australia and Illinois, is merely one of detail. The principle is established, and it only remains for the more conservative States to emulate the example of Australia and Illinois and adopt the working week of forty-eight hours and the working day of eight hours.

You will all have marvelled at the beauty of the World's Fair, and we speak of this as the World's Fair year. But the fair is an episode in a busy world. A year hence it will be only a charming memory and ten years hence the young people will wonder at our enthusiasm.

Meanwhile this law, which now commands so little attention, will unobtrusively fulfill its mission, checking the spread of disease, lengthening the childhood of the sons and daughters of the wage earners, prolonging the trade life of the girls and women, and paving the way for a shorter day of toil for men. And the people of Illinois of another generation, looking back from a happier day, will call this not the World's Fair year, but the first year of the Eight Hours' Law of America.

Inspector Mullen, of Mass., read a paper on :

FACTORY INSPECTION LAWS—THE BENEFITS TO BE DERIVED THEREFROM.

Mr. President and Members of the Association of Factory Inspectors :

That the public in general might be conversant with the term inspection laws, it would be expedient to define the same briefly. It may be said, the term applies to such laws as appertain to factories and public buildings, mercantile establishments, and in some States not at all to hotels, tenements and lodging-houses.

As we all know, those whose duties calls them to inspect factories, that there are many and various matters which attention is called to. In the inspection of public buildings, great responsibilities rest upon the inspector in perhaps a hundred different ways.

In factories and workshops many thousand wage-earners derive untold benefits, calculated not only to benefit the employe but the employer as well. In very many respects great protection has been given to employers for the better advancement of their business in many particulars.

Legislation in respect to factory laws dates back to the year 1802 in Great Britain. At that time the law related to the preservation of health and morals of those employed in cotton and other mills, also to cleansing and disinfecting such establishments and of ventilation.

In 1876, a board of health was appointed in Great Britain for the purpose of carrying out certain provisions of laws made at that time for the benefit of wage-earners. This provision related to the health and morals of both male and female employed in cotton and woolen mills; also factories to be whitewashed once a year, and that there be sufficient windows to supply fresh air. The time of employment not to exceed twelve hours daily, and no night work under certain conditions. This system was superseded by what was known as the factory and work-shop act, containing many new provisions. It provided educational learning, and the various acts since passed in Great Britain and the United States contain laws applying to the education of the masses. From these various laws of bygone days, it became apparent that there should be a more tangible system, to be known perhaps more extensively, and hence the system of inspection laws relating to factories, etc.

Excessive labor was one of the things that required to be remedied, the hardships that came from the employment of females and young children, greatly taxed the sympathies of many law-makers and friends of the wage-earner.

In the matter of protection from machinery, where so many dangers occur, much attention was paid to the subject of these dangers. In 1878 an inspection law was passed in England looking to education, and in 1877 Massachusetts enacted a law in relation to the same matter.

In 1877 a law relating to fire-escapes was passed in Massachusetts, providing for some means of safe egress and for the better protection of life from fire and panic in hotels, theaters, public halls and other places of public assembly. As you know, other States having inspection laws fell in line and suitable laws were enacted tending in this direction, and was also the case regarding safety of elevators and proper appliances looking to the safety of the many thousand passengers who are transported in them from day to day.

The law regulating the hours of labor, was at one time opposed to those whom it was intended to benefit, but after due consideration by many thousand operatives, it was unwise to endeavor to further antagonize a law which had a tendency to benefit them. Then came the employment of children, who were confined for hours in places where the atmosphere was bad in every particular; it was a great hardship to the young toilers, their bright and happy childhood was lost to them on account of the toil which they had to undergo.

The necessity of inspection laws arose from the natural sequence of varied employments, and from the utility of different occupations. The increasing wants with the advancement of civilization originated new employments, and this was also one of the many causes for legislation laws. It is said "that it is a well-known fact, that the vast machinery of industry, so necessary to civilization, is chiefly set in motion by the wants of man to satisfy his appetite, far more so than by the want of protecting his body, or the necessity of clothing and housing."

From the works of Von Hommer and Evlia we are informed, "that Adam was the first tailor, builder and sawyer; Seth was the first button maker and wood stapler; Enoch the first weaver; Noah the first shipwright; Joseph the first watchmaker and a most expert carpenter; Solomon a basket maker." It must be presumed that in those early days of the world's history, those engaged or endowed with trades similar to those of this day and time, was not troubled with laws to govern their hours of labor or for their protection against accidents or otherwise.

We notice that it is where civilization and enlightenment exists, that regular employments are performed, and as the people advance in wealth and power, distinct employments increase.

Through inspection laws much benefit is derived by those who make these advancements in the various industries. As does also the mechanic, whose fitness and skill is increased, and better tools and machinery are obtained. It brings about perfectness, and increases and makes greater competition among wage earners. It simplifies occupations, and the exertion is not so great to obtain a knowledge of these occupations. It suggests ways of less time. It affords opportunities for social intercourse and intellectual pleasures. We might also say, that the law benefits and rears an immense number of industrious men in very many particulars. The laws of to-day enable both young and old to obtain an education; they do not render the wage-earner incapable of properly discharging their duties, nor make them ignorant of their various trades and occupations, but trains them to exercise their powers for their own advantage.

Inspection laws and the benefits to be derived therefrom, tend to benefit wage-earners, and in more ways than one the organizations to which they belong. And why should this not be so? They belong to associations intended to be of benefit to them. I would refer to the fact, that in the British Museum there are papers which show that in ancient times association of working people existed among the Saxons and Romans, the Athenians, also Turks; they embraced every calling in which the wage-earner takes part to-day. And so down through every decade men more or less have been identified with such associations. Therefore, the laws of to-day, more or less, have a tendency to benefit the wage-earner of these associations.

Great advantages are to be derived in calling attention to many wrongs, as it were, and in redressing the same. The laws have been an incentive to exact and elevate. We are told, that "science has made earth give up her most valuable treasures. It has taught the sailor to plow the waters of the deep blue sea, has caused it to yield up its richest gems, has explored nature's labyrinth, and penetrated some of her most latent secrets. Art may continue to invent, and science to produce her ample stores, but the intelligence of man is needed to make judicious use of them." So it is in this present age, that good laws, intended to promote the welfare and interests of the wage-earner, has caused the most valuable treasures of the human mind to exert itself. Such as skill, talent and intelligence. The laws have had a tendency to have provided better tools, as it were, better machinery and better structures for their safety and convenience, and also provided better means in the progress of making and manufacturing.

Conditions in life are various; some have joy and sorrow, others care and pleasure — what is lost in one way is gained in another. One's talents may be good and accomplish great results in one occupation, others may be valueless, but equally useful in another. So that, some inspection laws cause much benefit to be derived, that good results may be accomplished to those having skill and intelligence.

Not many years have elapsed in some States, and it has not been long since, that a certain class of wage-earners suffered and experienced great difficulty in the matter of proper ventilation, and especially so in regard to their health. Female workers especially become constitutionally weaker, and liable to fall sooner or later as victims of their occupations. Some, perhaps, had years of suffering; many work-people had never thought of the subject, nor of the results upon their health; they could not give any definite intelligence or make any statements, and sometimes reluctant to acknowledge their employment was unhealthy, even if they knew it to be so. This order of things has been changed by the enactment of suitable laws covering the matter of health through and by the means of good ventilation.

It is no doubt well to live with such a systematic arrangement of time, that every day will bring its plain and positive duties to perform. The busy hours of work should be interspersed with enough pleasures to impart spirit and brightness, to this end the laws of regulating the hours of labor appertain. Inspection laws also tend to the education of the laboring classes of this country. It is one of the noblest works of the age; it helps to elevate, and makes secure, and establishes the respect for many rights. It improves the condition of the working classes. They advance in intelligence and refinement, and they are inspired with a feeling of personal freedom and independence. And so it is in this country, that the working classes have every facility for acquiring education and advancement. In no other country, as in this, have the children of the poor such means of acquiring an education, while freedom of speech is conducive to the forming of a correct estimate of matters and things in general. And so it is, that the laboring classes are educated and think for themselves. Inspection laws benefit in regard to education.

As public opinion changes, the customs of society will become more liberal, and in time, will follow a corresponding change in the laws, based upon free, liberal and sensible principles. It is, or should be, a result of the foundation on which the structure is erected. There is, perhaps, room for improvement in the making of new laws, and amendment of old ones. The laws that govern to-day would not have answered fifty years ago, nor will the laws that govern to-day be likely to answer fifty years hence. If the spread of knowledge and education in this country during the next fifty years are proportioned to the advance of the last fifty years, we not only predict a great elevation in the scale of intelligence, and a higher moral tone in society, but that such benefit will particularly accrue to the wage-earner. Every reform must be gradually accomplished—step at a time.

Through and by inspection laws untold benefits are derived in the matter of the safety of human lives. And, perhaps, there is no greater responsibility resting upon an inspector than that of looking after the safeguards that are required for the protection of life and limb. But, of course, there are many accidents to which mankind are exposed, which no human wisdom can foresee or prevent. Being furnished with faculties of a limited nature, and placed in the midst of a scene where so many powerful and complicated causes are in constant operation, we are some times exposed, all on a sudden, to the action of destructive causes of which we are ignorant or over which we have no control.

An ample field still remains for the exertion of all the energies of the human mind in the enactment of still more laws for the benefit of the wage-earner. Such as we have are as yet far removed from perfection.

It may be said that in many instances it will be found that ignorance is the fruitful source of indolence, waste and extravagance. The knowledge of the laws should be known in the various departments of labor, and it would prevent inattention, which to some extent is common among the working classes.

Wherever we turn our eyes, especially in the direction where the laws have an influence, and survey with attention the various processes, we perceive at every step the most striking benefits that are to be derived therefrom. It is not well to let any cause fail and languish for want of right management and for that support which the occasion demands. It is, therefor, in the province of the inspector to advance, when occasion requires, the various laws to such an extent, that there can be no misunderstanding as to the benefit to be derived. Judgment will be required in many cases, so that no mistakes may be made. Much can be done towards bringing about favorable results to the wage-earner, so that there can be brought about a right appreciation of the laws intended for their benefit. Improvements in the laws are going on, and it must be presumed that in these improvements the country and the wage-earner will be more prosperous and longer continue so.

Let us hope that the various inspection laws will have their beneficial effects upon those engaged in active employments. And that every new law enacted may be founded on broad and substantial principles, so that they may render to the mechanic, manufacturer and laborer greater benefits than the laws of to-day. And that they may pave the way for improvements, which will promote the external comforts of the wage-earner, so that the pleasures arising from such laws may be accessible to all, and human happiness will nearly be on a level, and the different ranks of mankind will enjoy it in nearly an equal degree. We may indulge the hope, that it will be the chief attention of such States that have no inspection laws, that they will see the advantage of enacting such laws that will tend to the interest of all wage-earners, so that it will be the means of producing great benefits wherever their influence extends.

A paper was read by Inspector Weinthal, of New Jersey, as follows :

SHOULD PUBLIC BUILDINGS BE PLACED UNDER GOVERNMENT CONTROL, ETC.

This question first requires a definition of what may be considered public buildings. I assume them, therefore, to include federal, municipal, churches, theatres, schools, and in fact any other structure in which the occupant has no direct opportunity to arrange matters for his own health or convenience. In a certain sense office buildings are public, but if unsuitable conditions prevail, it is easy for the tenant to vacate, or force the remedy.

Factories already come under regular inspection in many States.

The second question, and the main point, whether such structures should be placed under government, i. e., federal, or under local inspection, is open to decided discussion.

Divided responsibility is always a dangerous condition, and yet it is usually well nevertheless to have definite rules and unprejudiced inspection, when constructing buildings, to prevent danger due from ignorance or carelessness of the owners or builders.

On the other hand, in cities, where the question is of most importance, as a rule the service of reputable architects are retained to plan and carry out necessary feature of safe and healthful construction, and almost invariably so where the structure is of any special importance.

A resume of the varying conditions and methods of heating, lighting and ventilation might perhaps suggest some of the necessity for lack or need of special inspection by federal or local officials.

Unless the position of inspector be held rigidly without fear or favor, the same disadvantage would apply to both federal and local officers, viz., their dependence on political preferment as long as it is a position not visibly as a rule, although actually, a matter of the public health, and apparently not after certain rules and regulations have been enacted, demanding a man of the highest expert attainments to fill.

Taking these buildings considered as coming under the heading in brief review :

Federal buildings are invariably built under the plans and regulations of the architects and officers of the government, and permanently remain under their supervision.

Municipal buildings not infrequently suffer more from defects in these requisites than any other class, except as local pride may keep them up to a good standard of excellence, for what is the whole public's business through their officials as well, is most frequently to their own loss, in their attendance to seemingly larger matters of public interest.

Churches, and to a still greater degree theatres, are dependent upon their perfection of appointment and healthful comfort, for large congregations and audiences, without which in the one case, their influence and their growth suffer; in the other their finances, from scanty patronage.

Schools are, as a rule, built by special commissions of representative capable men, who, having a matter of most serious importance to handle, call in expert opinion, if their own information is inadequate, the result being in most cases at the present time in buildings which suitably provides warmth, light and fresh air for the young workers, who need healthful conditions during their brain working periods, while growing physically as well, more than perhaps any other portion of the human race. The one danger in school buildings is to see that the operation of these special plants is kept up to their designed abilities, and it is fair to say that, as a rule, the school boards do this duty satisfactorily.

The builders of great office buildings of our large cities, due to considerable rivalry for patronage, can usually be trusted to provide every facility for health and comfort that money and ingenuity can afford.

In brief, therefore, it seems as if questions of personal interest, would tend to keep up to a fair standard of excellence most of these structures, and would not require the amount of official inspection seemingly warranted by having federal officers, the main points of construction where the general community is interested, being safe dimensions and suitable materials. These are provided for in our larger cities by local building department rules and inspectors, and in several States by factory laws and special inspectors, which keep under control the one class of constructions most liable to be built regardless of hygienic principles, and without regard to fire protection, a feature that enters with great importance into the consideration of all classes of structures, and especially those where many people are to be gathered.

In general conclusion, it seems, therefore, to be an unnecessary task to lay upon the federal government, that of providing special inspectors for these questions of heat, light and ventilation, that do not effect the general welfare of the country, being but local in their dangers, even if improperly supplied.

Personal interest, local pride, and present laws may safely be left to render whatever inspection may be needed at the present day, and perhaps for many years to come.

Francis U. Coe, of New York, was called and read the following paper:

GUARDING OF ELEVATORS.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:

Both passenger and freight elevators are so essentially a part of the proper equipment of buildings for business purposes, that without them it is probable that a majority of our larger buildings would never have been erected. Without an elevator, floors in any building above the fourth or fifth story are comparatively worthless.

Not only are elevators an essential element but, responding to the greater demands upon them, manufacturers from year to year are increasing their speed. The public demands it. We prefer the fastest steamers in ocean travel, the most rapid transit in street car service, and we take the express that arrives first.

Elevators that a few years ago were designated "rapid," are now designated "slow." From the moderate speed of a pedestrian, elevators are now run up to a speed of ten or fifteen miles per hour. Many of the express cars to the clouds do not stop at all between the first and seventh stories. Patrons are fortunate if they stop anywhere, long enough to be entered or left in safety. Elevator boys are filled with this spirit of haste. They start the car before closing the door, and they open the door before stopping the car. They think it smart if they can get a door closed by the time it is beyond reach. All goes well till accidents occur, and then, if the boys are careless, the owners of buildings often suffer heavy damages, and the reckless boys are liable to fine or imprisonment, or both.

Many elevators are run by irresponsible boys who often thoughtlessly pull the operating rope or swing the lever, starting or stopping while persons are entering or leaving. In such practice one fairly takes his life in his hands in crossing the car threshold.

From newspaper clippings of published reports of elevator accidents in the United States, there now appears to be an average of not less than ten fatal, and fifteen serious, or a total of not less than twenty-five accidents per month, resulting from a well door being open with the car in motion. It is easily shown how most of these accidents occur. Referring to the passenger service; several persons are entering a car; one waits courteously for the others to proceed; a little in the rear he follows, but the boy, thinking all are aboard, starts his car, downward, before closing the door. The car starts just as the last patron is crossing the threshold. The top of the car entrance strikes him violently on the head, either knocking him down to the floor or into the car, in which case the accident is likely to be serious, or grinding him between the car and the floor, in which case the accident is generally fatal. Again, a passenger leaves a car; finding that he has gotten off at the wrong door, he hastily steps back, just as the car is started, or again, he steps through an open door before the car is stopped, and is killed.

As several persons frequently operate the same freight elevator, the variety of accidents here is much greater. Persons jump on or off the platform while it is in motion; they put their heads through open gateways and are crushed, or they are caught in automatic gates. Frequently one person will start a car while someone else, at another floor, is using it.

Standing as a prominent feature in elevator accidents is the fact that so large a percentage results from a door being open with the car in motion.

Opening a well door should, itself, mechanically and positively lock the car stationary, impossible to be started till after the door is closed; and vice versa, a moving car should be a positive mechanical guarantee that all doors are closed from basement to roof none of which can be opened till after the car stops.

The records of fatal and serious accidents on an essential part of the equipment of every first-class building, has drawn attention to the necessity of providing every possible guard for the public safety.

So far as it is demonstrated that practicable safeguards of great value for the protection of human life are available, it becomes the duty of owners to provide them. This should be enforced, if necessary, by legislation in every State.

Much has already been accomplished in this direction. Passenger elevators are provided with conductors, instructed to close doors before starting cars, although it must be confessed that in practice this is rarely done. Regular inspection of elevators has accomplished much to reduce the number of accidents. The law in most States requires gates or door of some sort at all elevator entrances.

Some of the best known of these appliances for freight elevators are automatic,—required to be automatic by law in some States, the purpose of the law being simply to insure the well entrances closed when not in use. But it is not really safe or desirable that a door or gate should be automatic, as in this case the door, moved unmercifully by the car, becomes itself an element of danger. A person might as well be killed by the car as by the door or gate.

The things desirable are: 1st. That all doors or gates remain closed while the car is in motion; and 2d. That an open door or gate shall at all times be a positive guarantee that the car is locked stationary, and can not be started till the door is closed.

As this part of the subject of guarding elevators is of so much importance, our paper will be confined to very recent improvements, the first to effectively cover these necessary requirements.

The invention to which we shall refer is by P. Kidder, of Boston, whose attention was forcibly directed to the need of better elevator protection from the accident in the Exchange building in that city a few months ago, by which a lady in leaving the car, fell ten stories to the base of the elevator well.

Briefly, Kidder's Safety Interlock, as arranged for passenger elevators, consists of a stop or block fast to the return operating rope, the stop duplicated at each floor, and placed at the rear edge of the sliding well doors, so connected as to move vertically with the rope behind the doors while the car is in motion, thus holding the doors closed. When the car stops, by movement of the operating rope to its central position, the stop rests opposite the equivalent of a horizontal groove in the side of the door, so that in opening the door the groove engages the stop fast to the rope, thus locking the operating rope till the door is again closed. This will be readily understood from the model here marked "Exhibit A." The device is extremely simple, durable and effective. By its use a car can not be started with a well door open on any floor; door can not be opened till after the car stops; opening a well door locks cars stationary; no additional effort or labor is required in operating either the car or the doors, nor is the speed or safely running an elevator diminished.

A modification of the invention for passenger elevators is shown in the second model, marked "Exhibit B." In this arrangement the ordinary latch of the door is not required. A mechanical guarantee is here furnished that the well door of every floor in the building is not only closed, but lock closed, before the car can be started, and furthermore, that stopping the car at any possible elevation does not unlock any of the doors. No door can be opened until the car is at rest within six inches of its proper level for that floor. A further advantage in this arrangement is that a leeway of an inch ajar can be allowed for each door when locked closed, thereby releasing a lady's dress, if caught. This provision would have prevented the fatal accident in the "Waldorf," New York, on its dedication night a few months ago, according to the information we have received. A further advantage in this arrangement of Mr. Kidder's invention, is that no dependence need be placed on the present ordinary latches, which are frequently out of order, due in part to the loose fitting and wear of sliding doors in their guideways; and further, that no mechanism of any kind is required on the doors. A press button in the floor of the car at the point where an operator naturally stands to open the door, is provided, which, if the car is within six inches of its proper level, engages and swings the upright bar forward from behind the door, allowing the latter to be opened in the usual manner, after the car is stopped.

In the third model, marked "Exhibit C," is shown an adaptation to freight elevators with vertically sliding doors. The doors may be double as shown, counterbalancing each other, or a single door used, as preferred in some cases. An auxiliary rope over additional sheaves, carrying other stops, similarly equips other doors when placed on opposite sides of the well. In this way it is practicable to apply the device to doors on all four sides of the well at each landing.

In all of the arrangements shown, it is desirable that the doors be made at least six and one-half feet in height to entirely close the entrance ways, thus preventing an elevator well from becoming a flue in case of fire. The ordinary trap door, or automatic hatch-way-cover, is intended to provide this latter protection, but is objectionable on several accounts: First. It can only be used on slow speed elevators, although there are several manufacturers of these doors who advertise and, in some cases, guarantee them to work satisfactorily for a given time in a well where the elevator travels at a speed of 240 feet per minute. I have never seen any system of automatic trap doors working in an elevator well smoothly, where the elevator traveled above fifty feet per minute, and I know that reliable manufacturers of the best of those appliances will not give a guarantee when an elevator exceeds that rate of speed. While I believe that no freight elevator should be allowed to travel much faster than fifty feet per minute, the business community do not agree with me, and it is a common thing in my State to meet with some which travel as fast as 150 feet per minute. Second. They are heavy and cumbersome, working with considerable noise, and causing a very disagreeable jarring of the car as it passes through each floor. The mechanism which operates them, in most cases, is complicated, and liable to get out of order. Where I have found them on elevators which run above fifty feet per minute, they are nearly always tied back because they are out of order, or to save power, which is by no means a small item of expense, after the doors are attached, as they must be opened and closed at each floor every time the elevator car passes up or down. One firm in Buffalo, which has five elevators equipped with the "Morton System of Automatic Trap Doors," informed me that it required, on an average, ten horse-power to operate them when they were all in working order. This, I think, is rather a high estimate, but if it takes one-half of that amount, it would seem to account for a great deal of the bitter opposition of elevator owners to those appliances. They are very expensive, costing from fifty to seventy-five dollars a floor. Then they can not be applied to very large elevators, such as are used in planing mills, or other factories where large machinery or bulky packages have to be carried, and lastly, they are not always safe; a number of very serious accidents have happened in my district by persons being caught standing on the doors when the elevator car was ascending. Two accidents of that kind happened in the city of Johnstown within a year. The wife of the proprietor of a shoe factory went into the building and stepped onto the trap door; when the elevator car came up it raised the door on which she was standing, and threw her violently to the floor, breaking one of her legs. The other happened in a worsted mill; a boy was standing on the trap door, when the elevator came up from a lower floor, raised the door and threw him against a railing by the side of the elevator, where the life would have been crushed out of him but for the presence of mind of the man on the car, who, when he heard the boy scream, stopped the elevator. As it was he received very serious injuries.

There are automatic gates of different makes and styles, as well as vertical automatic doors, but they are all open to the same objections that have been raised against the automatic hatch covers, namely, they are expensive, liable to get out of order, can be opened when the car is in motion, and are often hooked or tied back. All of these objections have been overcome by the inventor of the Kidder Interlocking Device.

Summarizing the advantages of this for freight elevators, it may be stated: First. The car can not be started till all the doors are locked, closed. Second. No door can be opened till car stops. Third. Opening a door locks car stationary. Fourth. The stop on the rope insures proper position of rope, so that a car is not likely to crawl while being loaded. Fifth. No person on one floor can start the car if it is in use, or a door open on any other floor. Sixth. The use of this device is a protection and advantage to the present ordinary mechanism of elevators in this way, that on power elevators it insures the rope being pulled to the correct point to stop the car and apply the brake; on hydraulic elevators insures the valve completely closed; and on electric elevators prevents burning out the switches. Seventh, The device is extremely simple and not at all likely to get out of order. Eighth. It is inexpensive.

The device is conveniently applicable to passenger elevators using an operating lever in the car instead of the pull rope either by use of an auxiliary rope for the stops, connecting directly with the rocker arms or shaft of the valve mechanism, or by an engagement of the vertical swinging bar of model B with a locking bar attached to the car directly engaging the operating lever.

Mr. Fuller, of New York, read a paper on

CHILD LABOR.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Convention:

I think that never in the history of this country did there exist such a strong and broad sense of Americanism as at the present time. From all sections comes an ardent desire to arrange our society on a basis which will educate public opinion up to a standard where all our people will work together intelligently, and for the moral good and intellectual well-being of mankind.

The employment of child labor has been a question of vital importance which has been given earnest investigation by the law-making bodies of the civilized worlds, and by all humanitarians who see the retrogression of mankind by a system which takes from the child all the benefits of our public schools; which contracts their physical and mental energies, robs them of the loving and moral care of a mother's nature, and, above all, the influence of home, so potent in developing the prosperity of our great nation. In the discussion of this question it is not presumptuous to claim, in the limitation and regulation of such labor, the influence and power of the factory inspection department of the various States.

The agitation of this great wrong and the deep interest manifested therein by law-making bodies, was the stepping stone to the enactment of laws which proclaimed that education was the foundation stone upon which our free and independent government is builded, and the future prosperity of the nation depends upon the judicious enforcement of these laws. The Empire State has nothing to regret in her compulsory education law, in the creation of her Factory Inspection Department, or in the power granted her inspectors for the enforcement of those child labor laws. The day of experiment in these respects is a thing of the past and every succeeding Legislature weaves stronger bands of protection around her children.

Nor is there any deception in these laws. From the moment the child is born our law reaches out its iron hand of justice, inflexible alike to the indulgent or worthless father and mother, and it claims the right to lead that child in the paths of virtue and intelligence. The obstacles that have been placed in our path against the proper observance of these laws have not come so much from the employers of labor as from the degraded, avaricious disposition which is found in so many of the human race. It seems incredible that the love of a parent has become so degraded that the responsibility of this crime of tearing the child of tender years away from home and school, must rest solely with the parent. But it is so.

How often in the discharge of his duties, will the inspector find the evasion of the law springing from the head of the family, who takes advantage of every technical point in the law, and who forces his wife and children into the work shop or mills that he may enjoy freedom from cares, and allow his vices to have imperious sway upon the labor of that wife and her innocent children? It is nothing for such a bestial thing in the guise of man to bear false witness as to the age of his children, and thus give to his offspring the first lesson in deceit and falsehood. We have seen it stated in such case that "six months in jail and hard labor would be fit punishment for such a man." But the inspector find such depravity in the homes of laboring classes, the free, intelligent American laboring man, the righteous indignation which swells up in his breast finds no slayer of all that is good and ennobling in his own child, and no punishment which could be inflicted is too great for the moral leper who swells the great army of illiterates, adds to the inmates of houses of prostitution, and fills the cells of our penal institutions to overflowing.

The inspectors are constantly recommending to the Legislature amendments to the law for the better protection of the laboring classes, and for the strictest enforcement of those laws. The thousands of cripples seen by them in their rounds of duty, made cripples by the neglect to place proper safeguards around machinery, has been the means of giving much needed protection in this respect. Fire-escapes, ventilation, sanitary conditions, etc., have all received our attention, but, above all things that appeal to our sense of right and justice, of common humanity even, are safeguards which should be placed around the young. And what safeguard is greater than the vast influence of home—of a mother's loving care and moral influence over her loved ones?

The duties of an factory inspector are onerous, and the responsibilities which rest on his shoulders are not always pleasant and are almost unendurable. It is my honest belief, backed by the history of our departments in the past, that upon him lies to a greater degree the responsibility of the future welfare of true Americanism than upon the individual who fills the pulpit. And the power of the factory inspector for good or evil lies in his enforcement of those wise laws created for the public good. The advancing march of a higher civilization demanded the enactment of compulsory laws in regard to child labor, for careful observance of the results of such a system revealed in all its baneful light the ignorance and depravity which it thrust upon the world. What more potent incentive is needed by the inspector to compel the brutal parent to recognize the responsibility which rests upon him to educate his children and surround them with the moral and intellectual benefits which accrue from our public institutions of learning and from a mother's love and care?

And now arises a question that demands the most careful and earnest consideration. It is the age at which a child should be allowed to seek employment. True, we find cases where our heartfelt sympathy goes out to the widow, or to the home where sickness and death have been the prime mover, for the resolve to place a child at labor in a mill or work-shop. Our heart goes out to the afflicted ones in cases of this kind, but our duty to future generations must outweigh our sympathy for the present circumstances. In such instances, I believe that if our charitable institutions would work in unison with the department of factory inspectors, their field of usefulness and power for doing good would be augmented three-fold, and they would do much more for the alleviation of distress than they could by adopting any other method of procedure.

The question of age is of too great importance to be left with the parent as an individual. The parent sees but one side of the question, and so it becomes the duty of the State to intervene between parent and child, that the latter may receive the full benefits of the privileges due to a future citizen. The young child is more susceptible to good or evil than the man or woman, and needs the healthful influence of a home and school to fit him for the future battles of life. Our public schools prepare the mental faculties, while God's free given air prepares the physical body for all its future demands. Sixteen years of age is none too young to leave the home circle and school for the mill or work-shop, while 18 years would meet my greater approbation for the following reasons:

1. A more comprehensive education would result to the child, and its physical body would be more nearly rounded out and made strong enough to enter upon the arduous labors required to make a living in these times, when hard work and plenty of it are demanded.

2. Much of the vexed question of capital and labor would be obviated by the employment of the thousands of the unemployed at a remuneration in keeping with the needs of the family. It would do away with the employment of mere children, and forcing them to do a man's work for a child's pay, an existing evil to which may be attributed a great deal of the present trouble between capital and labor.

3. I have observed that when a child of tender years once leaves school to earn money, for a short period only, let us say, owing to force of circumstances which makes it necessary for a larger income in that family, that child very rarely goes back to school again. When the boy or girl once begins to work, childhood is gone forever.

But your patience or time will not permit me to go further at this present time, although much more can be said upon the question. It may be that the age of 18 years will not meet the general favor, but I would suggest that not less than 16 years, at the earliest, be made the legal age at which a child may be employed in mill or work-shop. It is true that 16 years does not permit the child to attain the full development of its mind and physical growth, but in the good public schools of our country, surrounded by the benign influence of home and a mother's care, the future man or woman who must be a part and parcel of the prosperity and development of our great country, may, by the time he or she has become 16 years old, be morally, mentally and physically fit to enter upon the burdens of labor.

In conclusion let me say, let us be Americans for America; let us give ample protection to coming generations. Our country demands men not dwarfs, physically and mentally. Do not, then, let us rob the innocent and helpless being thrust upon the world of any of the rights to which it was born under our Constitution. Our task is a fearful one, but — “Granted the odds are against us, granted we enter the field,

When fate has fought and conquered, broken the sword and shield:
What then? Shall we ask for quarter, or say our work is done?
Say, rather, a greater glory be ours if the field be won.
It is war with the wrong of years, prejudice, pride and hate;
Against the world's decrees and the frown of an evil fate.
A crown to the one who wins, and the worst is only a grave;
And somewhere, somewhere still, a reward awaits the brave.
A broken shield without, but a heroes' heart within,
And grasp with the hand of steel the broken blade may win.”

A paper was read by Inspector Ellis, of Ohio, as follows:

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN AT DANGEROUS OCCUPATIONS UNDER THE LAWS OF OHIO.

Mr. President and Fellow Inspectors :

In following our vocations as inspectors, we came across a great many minors working at dangerous machinery, and other employment which we considered that youths of tender age should not be employed at, and in consequence, we started an agitation against the evils of such employment, with the result that the legislature on April 8, 1890, passed the following law:

AN ACT to prevent the engagement of children at such employment whereby their lives and limbs may be endangered, or their health injured, or their morals likely to be impaired.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that no child under the age of sixteen years shall be employed by any person, firm or corporation in this state, at employment whereby its life or limb is endangered, or its health is likely to be injured, or its morals may be depraved by such employment.

§ 2. Any person, firm or corporation in this state, who willfully causes or permits the life or limb of any child under the age of sixteen years to be endangered, or its health to be injured, or its morals to become depraved from and while actually in their employ, or who willfully permits such child to be placed in such a position or to engage in such employment that its life or limb is in danger, or its health likely to be injured, or its morals likely to be impaired by such position or employment, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not less than ten (10) dollars nor more than fifty (50) dollars, or imprisonment not less than thirty nor more than ninety days for each and every offense.

§ 3. It shall be the duty of the state inspector of workshops and factories to enforce the provisions of this act.

§ 4. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage. (Passed April 8, 1890.)

You will see by the provisions of the law, that the employment of children under the age of 16 years at any occupation whereby their lives or limbs are endangered, their health injured, or their morals depraved by such employment, was left entirely to the inspectors to judge. It became necessary, therefore, that we should exercise our judgment very carefully, so as to benefit the children and at the same time not work hardship to poor widows or others who depend on the meager support of such children. Therefore, after the first year's inspection, we prepared a partial list of employments at which children under 16 years of age should not be employed at, which is as follows:

EMPLOYMENTS AT WHICH CHILDREN UNDER THE AGE OF 16 YEARS SHALL NOT BE EMPLOYED.

Manufacturers and others coming under the above act passed April 8, 1890, "to prevent the engagement of children at such employment whereby their limbs and lives may be endangered or their health injured, or their morals likely to be impaired," will please adhere to the following:

No child under the age of 16 years shall be employed at sewing belts, or to assist in sewing belts in any capacity whatever; nor shall any such child adjust any belt to any machinery; they shall not oil or assist in oiling, wiping or cleaning machinery; they shall not operate or assist in operating circular or band-saws, wood-shapers, wood-jointers, planers, sand-paper or woodpolishing machinery, wood-turning or boring machinery, stamping machines in sheet metal and tinware manufacturing, stamping machines in washer and nut factories, operating corrugating rolls, such as are used in roofing or wash-board factories, nor shall they be employed in operating any steam-boilers, steam machinery or other steam generating apparatus; they shall not operate or assist in operating dough brakes or cracker machinery of any description, wire or iron straightening machinery; nor shall they operate or assist in operating rolling mill machinery, punches or shears, washing, grinding or mixing mills, or calendar rolls in rubber manufacturing; nor shall they operate or assist in operating laundrying machinery; they shall not be employed in stripping or working in tobacco in any form; nor shall such children be employed in any capacity in preparing composition for matches, or dipping, dyeing, or packing matches; they shall not be employed in any capacity in the manufacture of paints, colors or white lead; nor shall they be employed in any capacity whatever in operating or assisting to operate any passenger or freight elevator; nor shall they be employed in any capacity whatever in the manufacture of goods for immoral purposes or any other employment that may be considered dangerous to their lives and limbs, or where their health may be injured or morals depraved; nor shall females under 16 years of age be employed in any capacity where such employment compels them to remain standing constantly.

The list is only a partial one, as we in our inspections almost daily come across some child working at something that we consider they should not be employed at, and promptly have them removed; and I am glad to say, that the manufacturers, or a majority of them, are heartily in favor of the law. During the year 1891, we had a large number of children discharged, most of whom worked in tobacco in various forms. People may differ in their opinions in regard to the evil effects of working with tobacco, so we obtained the opinions of some of the best physicians in the country on the subject, and they say that working in tobacco is injurious to the health of young people, as their system will absorb a certain amount of nicotine that tobacco contains, and nicotine being a poison, the system would retain the poison, causing heart and lung trouble, sallow complexion and dyspepsia; that is why working in tobacco was included in our list of employments at which children should not be employed.

I can recall many instances where adults were seriously injured on certain kinds of work, which goes to prove that if adults have not the judgment to prevent injury, much less have children under 16 years of age. One case, a woman was showing some friends through a laundry where she worked. They came to the machine called the centrifugal wringer. It is made of two cylinders, one on the inside of the other, the outside one is stationary and the inside one is perforated and revolves at a high velocity from 2,000 to 2,500 per minute. They are as large as an ordinary sized wash-tub open at the top; the clothes are placed on the inside of the inside cylinder and the machine started; the water is forced out of the clothes by centrifugal force, and as a consequence the clothes go to the surface of cylinder, leaving the center, to all appearances empty; this lady was explaining the workings of the machine and told them to look, she could put her hand down in the machine without touching. She did so and in the tenth part of a second, her arm was torn off at the shoulder. I could cite many cases where adults have been injured through either carelessness or a lack of knowledge of the workings of the machinery. A great many instances have come to my knowledge, where children of both sexes of tender years have been injured. I have often been asked what was to become of the children if we turned them out of the workshops and factories, and I tell them they should be at school. We have a law on our statute book requiring children to attend school until they are of a certain age, which is as follows :

AN ACT to compel the elementary education of children.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, that all parents, guardians and other persons who have the care of children, shall instruct them, or cause them to be instructed, in reading, spelling, writing, English grammar, geography and arithmetic. Every parent, guardian or other person having the charge of any child between the age of eight and fourteen years, shall send such child to a public, private or parochial school, for the following period: In the city districts, in each school year, beginning September first, not less than twenty weeks, at least ten weeks of which, commencing within the first four weeks of the school year, shall be consecutive; and in special, village, and township districts, not less than sixteen weeks in each school year, eight of which, commencing within the four weeks of the school year, shall be consecutive, unless the child is excused from such attendance by the superintendant of the public schools, in the city or other districts having such superintendent, or by the clerk of the board of education in special, village or township districts not having such superintendent, or by the principal of the private or parochial school, upon a satisfactory showing, either that the bodily or mental condition of the child does not permit of its attendance at school, or that the child is being instructed at home by a person qualified, in the opinion of the superintendent in city or other districts having such superintendent, or the clerk of the board of education in special village or township districts not having such superintendent, to teach the branches named in this section. In case such superintendent, principal or clerk refuse to excuse a child from attendance at school, an appeal may be taken from such decision to the probate judge of the county, upon the giving of a bond, within ten days after said refusal, to the approval of said judge to pay all the costs of the appeal, and the decision of the probate judge in the matter shall be final. All children between the ages of eight and sixteen years, not engaged in some regular employment, shall attend school for the full term the schools of the district in which they reside are in session during the school year, unless excused for the reasons above named.

The law does not, in my mind, go far enough. It should be in conformity with the inspection laws; not only that, but it should be universal for this reason; that in Ohio, especially along the Ohio river, I have ordered small boys working in the glass factories and nail mills discharged on account of their age, and they would go across the river and get like employment in Virginia and Kentucky, where they can work if they are only old enough to do what is required of them. Of course, where boys or girls under 16 are discharged, the work they have done must be done by someone else, and the result is that older persons must be employed to take their places and command better wages, while the manufacturer across the river, who employs the boys we discharged, make the same kind of ware and pay less wages, and can undersell the manufacturer on the Ohio side with the same profit; therefore, the law should be universal, and, I think, it should be our aim to have each State enact similar laws. I do not give the experience of the Ohio inspectors only, but also that of the inspectors of other States, who are confronted with the same conditions. The law under which we are working has proved very beneficial to children, at least to those who have been removed from working at dangerous machinery or at work whereby their health has been injured, etc., because they get some recreation which children naturally need. But there are some parents, I am sorry to say, who, when approached on the subject of their children working, say that they need their help, and they would rather have them in the workshop than to have them run the streets or going to school; they also say that they had to go to work when they were 12 years old, and their children were no better than they. Our laws have done a great deal for the benefit of children, as will be proven by referring to our report. In the report for 1891 we had about 200 children discharged from unhealthy and dangerous occupation, and last year only about one-fourth of that number, showing a large decrease, as the manufacturers are getting to be more careful whom they employ and what they employ them to do, as they do not wish to violate the law. I have seen children toiling, from day to day, in illy ventilated workshops, who actually looked as though they had been taken from the grave. They were going about their work with pale and emaciated forms, as though they were carrying heavy burdens, and when meal time came they could not eat, so tired were they; than have their brutal parents tell me that they were better off in the shops than running the streets or at school.

Friends, think of it, small boys and girls working among the whizzing machinery of a planing mill, or woolen factory, or cotton mill or cordage factory, nail mills, rolling mills, rubber factories, match factories, feeding printing presses, working at emery or buffing wheels, sand belts, wood planers, buzz saws, stave jointers, and a hundred and one other kinds of employment where they are liable to be hurled into eternity or be crippled for life at any minute.

The men and women who are holding high positions as officers, civil and military, and teachers of the young are fast passing away, and the children must of necessity, sooner or later, take their places. Now, I ask you, what kind of a government can we expect of the rising generation, if we allow them to work in illy ventilated workshops, or at machinery whereby their lives or limbs may be endangered or their health injured? Therefore, let us exert ourselves to have the law making power of the several States enact laws that will compel children under 16 years of age to attend school, so that it will give them a start to the higher branches of education, and fit them to hold the positions which they will be called on to fill. By doing this, we will be sure that we will have a good government, good healthy men and women, and not a generation of dwarfs and cripples.

Mr. Jeremiah J. Sullivan, expert of the Department of Labor, Washington, D. C., read the following paper:

WHO IS THE FACTORY INSPECTOR?

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:

I think I can adopt no better prelude to this paper than by asking:

1. Who are the factory inspectors?
2. Where are they?
3. And why are they?

4. And what do members of labor organizations expect from them?

I desire to spread the title out pretty well, as I have a standing grievance against the president of this association, which has been drawing interest for about seven years, and which I desire to pay; and then, too, I have some crude ideas in my head, which I believe, if acted upon, will undoubtedly benefit the whole human race, and I desire to vent them right here, as this is the first, and I believe it will be the last public audience that will ever care to listen to me.

In treating of this question, I speak from a strictly trades-union standpoint. Trades-unions have had much to do with the creation of factory laws in the past, and will have much to do with their creation and proper observance in the future. We do not deny, however, that factory laws are for the benefit of all factory employes, union and non-union alike, and we are glad that they are so general and salutary in their effects; but we are speaking as one of that class whose efforts, more than any other source, placed these laws upon the statute books. I am a firm believer in the fable of the "bundle of sticks," and will be as long as I live, whether toiling in the work-shop, or released from the restraint which it imposes, for in my judgment trades-unionism is the toiler's best dogma, his anchor of hope, and the only life-boat that will successfully buffet and safely ride the adverse winds and waves of labor's sea. The more the wage-workers can be banded together in organization, created and administering for themselves and for the protection of their own interests, the better it will be, not only for themselves, but for the communities of which they are a party; and I believe that this truth has been pretty thoroughly demonstrated in the recent labor troubles in Chicago.

When the peace of society was endangered, and the law was to be defied, trades unionists not only held aloof from these useless demonstrations which you witnessed, but offered their services in preserving the peace, and the fact that legitimate trade-unionists were not found in these demonstrations at all, is the very best argument that can be offered in favor of unionism, as it demonstrated plainly that even in times of great business depressions, the union is a safeguard, and a help in being able to keep most of its members at work. I think, therefore, my friends, that as trade-unionists we are entitled to some consideration, in fact to much more than we generally receive, only in an uncomplimentary way, and that you will agree with me, when I assert, that the most efficient and intelligent workers, and orderly and law-abiding citizens are to be found in trades-union ranks, and as such you must wish them well.

I mentioned in the beginning that I had a grievance against your president, and I think it no more than right that I should tell you something about it, and when you have learned the facts in the case, I believe you will agree with me that our friend Franey is both heartless and unfeeling. Some years ago your presiding officer here was the president of a typographical union to which I was attached, and when he laid down the composing stick and evoluted to the office of factory inspector, he relinquished into my hands the presidential gavel, which he had wielded so vigorously and effectively as president of the union. In that position I was often compelled to come in contact with the factory inspectors for, while it is well known that the counting rooms of many printing offices are finished off in rosewood and plate glass, and are supplied with Turkish rugs and Persian mats, and are alike comfortable and inviting, the composing rooms of some of these same establishments are sadly wanting in the agreeable conditions which should be found there, and which would be found there if the factory laws were properly enforced. Well, to use a vulgarism, I thought I had a "dead cinch" on the factory inspector's office of my own State, and I was, therefore, not at all modest in my demands upon that office; and, so when I carefully prepared my first letter to our friend here, and suggested therein that as practical scheme and a really good thing, the idea of lodging the employes in the factory, and of copiously supplying the shop with "sliding poles," now used in our fire engine houses, and also of furnishing every employe with a complete working garment, made in one piece, that could be put on with one jerk of the buckle, in order to accelerate the movements of the weary.

limbed, and enable them to respond hastily to a sudden call if the foreman pried the form, I confidently expected that my suggestions would receive some consideration — and they did. I received a letter, written on a large sheet of paper, with our friend Franey's name printed upon it in conspicuously large type, with a good deal of fancy scroll work about it, and with a picture of a nice looking young lady holding a fish scale in her hand, although the sign above the stilliards was "seal." I was informed that there were several insane asylums in the State, and a particular good one for harmless imbeciles at Bloomington, where copies of the annual report of the factory inspector would be mailed to me, and from the perusal of which it was hoped that, at lucid intervals, I would derive much pleasure and benefit. Such, alas, is the golden realization of hope, the fickle and uncertain goddess whom we woo so lovingly.

With one rude gust the incense and myrrh which I had offered at her altar was swept away, and the factory inspectors stood out boldly in all their heartlessness. I was disgusted, of course, and resolved to take a departed sage's advice and "go west," and while lingering here in this phenomenal city, I ran across your president. He wanted to know how I liked his annual reports, and if I didn't feel grateful enough, provided my mind had ceased to wander, to say something to you ladies and gentlemen about the great benefits resulting from factory laws, and I might incidentally mention what members of labor organizations expected from factory inspectors. Now, my friends, I believe it is well to "aim high, if you shoot low," for it shows a laudible ambition at least, but if there are any here who have requests to make upon the factory inspectors, I would strongly advise them to reverse the principle of "aiming high" and to "shoot low," as factory game is not to be found in very high altitudes. And so I have accepted the invitation of your president, and before I get through, he'll want to offer me a bribe to cut this paper short, or else get a policeman to pull me off the stage. But "Who are the factory inspectors?"

While reflecting seriously upon this question, I arrived at the sad conclusion that factory inspectors, whom I had conceived to be etherial and esthetical beings, first from the fact that they can seldom be found, and when at last unearthed are discovered sipping arrack, with a taste which, if esthetical, is, at least, healthy, are nothing more than plain, common, everyday individuals of both genders, who have been taken from the ordinary ranks of humanity, and led by devious paths and winding ways into that haven of rest—the factory inspector's office—the goal upon which a few thousand self-sacrificing men, and an equally, if not greater number of self-sacrificing women, have their eye, where twelve or sixteen hours of self-sacrifice each day is invariably rewarded by kicks, cuffs and sore abuse, and in the return to his native heath of the wanderer after factory glory, a wiser, sadder, but better man.

Throwing jesting aside, we find that factory inspectors are practical men and women, who have been chosen or appointed on account of their special fitness and interest in the work, to execute those laws which the different States have placed upon their statute books, and which have for their objects the moral, physical, and, I believe, we may add, the intellectual improvement of shop operatives. Laws which, if properly enforced, will give more light and more sunshine, purer air and more of it, and will add to the healthful and improved sanitary surroundings of the factory employe, conditions which mean for him a little longer life and a little pleasanter life while he toils in the workshop for his daily bread.

As one who has been closely affiliated with labor organizations for some years, I have frequently been brought in contact with factory inspectors, and while the activity of pernicious politicians or other causes have sometimes brought disappointments in trying to secure the improvements desired, I am frank to say that I have always found the factory inspectors in my own State honest and untiring in their efforts to execute faithfully every factory law upon the books, and ever ready and willing to listen to and adjust the grievances which I have presented in behalf of my fellow workers, and the few instances in which my requests were not granted, the law itself, and not the factory inspectors was to blame. There may be some particular cases where the unseen hand — the hand of the assemblyman, the senator or even the governor is made to play a part, where some big corporation or some big railroad company is involved, and the law is thwarted, but when this is the case, a power higher than the factory inspectors can exercise, is responsible for the act, and no one should feel the defeat more keenly than the factory inspector himself.

If factory inspectors were clothed with more authority than they now possess, especially in some of the States, and the members of labor organizations were possessed of a better knowledge of factory laws generally, and especially versed in factory laws which apply to their own locality, and there is no reason why they should not be so, as copies of these laws can be secured for the asking, some of the disappointments which are now inevitable would not be experienced. It is the duty, therefore, of members of labor organizations to see that the authority which is now lacking be granted, and that insufficient or imperfect factory laws be improved. There should be no conflict, and I am happy to say that in my experience I have seldom found any between factory inspectors and the members of labor organizations, but the most cordial relations should exist between them, and the most cordial relations will exist between them if the former faithfully discharge their trust, and the latter are true to themselves and to the unions to which they belong. In this day and in this age, factory inspectors and factory laws are a necessity and to undertake to properly regulate factories without them is as useless as for a man with a wooden leg to try and win a foot race. They are surely a great help to those for whom they were created, and many of the sad conditions which surrounded the factory employe in the past, and which in some cases still surrounds him to-day, have been improved, and will in the near future be entirely eradicated, under the rigid application and enforcement of factory laws. Between them both, the "sweater" should be of short duration, and there never was more joy in heaven over one sinner or over a dozen sinners doing penance, than there will be among members of labor organizations when this cockroach of humanity, this waterbug of our commercial life, dark and ugly, that crawls around in damp basements and dark corners, has once and forever, and for all time, been eradicated from factory life. Factory laws are the outcome of the efforts of members of labor organizations to improve their working conditions, coupled with the assistance of noble and humane men and women who have the improvement of the laboring and deserving workers at heart; and in my humble judgment those who are appointed as factory inspectors, and those into whose hands the execution of factory laws are entrusted, should come from the ranks of those, the tireless efforts of whose members have placed factory laws upon the statute books of sixteen States in the Union. The politician should have as little to do with the factory laws as possible, and I use the word politician in its narrow sense, for it is from this source, more than from any other, that obstruction to the faithful execution of factory laws is generally found.

There should be more uniformity in the factory laws of the different States, as the conditions which require factory laws are the same in one State as another. Fire-escapes are as necessary on buildings in the State of Illinois as they are in the State of New York; proper sanitation is as necessary here as there; the proper guarding of elevator shafts and of dangerous machinery is likewise as necessary in one State as in another, yet if a member of a labor organization, or in fact any other factory employe, were to make a request upon the factory inspector of Illinois for the placing of fire-escapes upon the building in which he is employed, or for the proper guarding of dangerous machinery, he would not meet with success, for the factory laws here for some reason do not cover these improvements. This should not be so, and we hope to see these improvements made at the next session of the Illinois Legislature, and the members of the powerful labor organizations here should help along in the matter. Of course, we remember that factory laws are something new for Illinois, and some time must elapse before they are as perfect and salutary as the members of labor organizations here desire to see them.

Factories are necessarily the same in all civilized countries, so far as outward appearances go. The inward construction varies only as between the old machinery and the new. The factory whistle and the factory bell continue to perform their usual functions—that of getting the people out of bed in the middle of the night or earlier, to commence their daily toil; no change in this. Numerous devices are now in use to check the tardy ones, from the ordinary check down to a recent electrical enumerator, which checks the man's name, and registers the exact time of his appearance. There seems to be no limit to the time-savers that a visit to any of these factories will unfold. I would suggest as another good thing, that already offered before, that the employes be lodged in the factory, and the "sliding pole" be introduced, so as to economize time.

It is said in defence of the factory system that the buildings are well constructed and well ventilated, and that all the luxuries of the season are at the command of the employes. Well, those benefits are conferred upon the lower animals under care of the beneficent master, and really at times, I am given to the reflection that to be a horse or a mule would be far more comfortable than being a common factory worker in some of the establishments which I have seen.

In the present crisis, when the industrial congestion and disorder is a burning disgrace to common intelligence, it is well for us to consider conditions from an optimistic standpoint, and "look out for the greatest good to the greatest number," and that is No. 1. Let the United States restrict immigration for a term of years, until that mass of humanity now upon our shores may affiliate and become citizens, and a part of the body politic. The various alleged remedies so freely circulated by newspapers, labor organizations, etc., looking toward land colonization, work upon public improvements, etc., are not remedies; they simply cover up the festering sores, and leave the disease to run riot through the system. It is noticeable that this question of immigration is touched upon very generously by all parties and all men. It has such a direct bearing upon factory life that I have concluded to touch upon it here. Is it cowardice or humanity? I am inclined to think that cowardice is the predominating feature. Humanity will suggest that the entire change of life which these people take up, together with their poverty, would aggravate the disease. The European governments have, since the formation of this republic, relieved themselves of their criminals, paupers and surplus population, not for the benefit of that class of humanity, but for the purpose of relieving the strain upon their national purse-strings. Why should this country longer sustain this unnatural course? Let us temporize no longer upon these questions. As a result of this low grade and indiscriminate immigration, every city in the United States to-day is cursed with sweat-shops, and sweat-shops of the most revolting character.

The factory life continues to develop into commercial life, is noticeable by all investigators of statistics and factory inspectors, but that is a feature in name only, as all its essential features are nil, except in the older countries of Europe. There the daily habits of life, food, morals, recreations and holidays are all cut from the same pattern. What the father has done, so will the children continue to follow, until forced to change by improved machinery. The food supply, meal time, etc., are the same in each household. This feature of factory life must necessarily accrue to the advantage of the employer only, as he is, therefore, enabled to base his wage rate upon the cost of living, and not upon the cost of production, or upon the productive capacity of the worker. It is not a matter of equity and justice that govern all men—it is that of greed. Will the time ever come, when some eminent physician will discover the lymph to inoculate man, that will eradicate that greed from the system. If so, the labor problem will then be solved. The best lymph so far discovered, is the factory law rigidly administered, and this is one of the things which members of labor organizations expect from factory inspectors. In looking over the Second Special Report of the United States Commissioner of Labor, a compilation of the factory and labor laws of the States and territories, we find that there are factory inspectors proper in only sixteen States, while in fourteen others laws partially regulating work-shops are found. This information astonishes us, as we are unable to understand why factory employes are so laggard of their own interests, of their own safety, and of their own health and comfort, as not to avail themselves of the benefits of factory laws, and we are, therefore, not at all surprised to notice the sad condition of affairs which we find existing in certain localities.

When we go down into some of the underground habitations, where we can almost truthfully say that God's sunlight never enters, and where the perpetual gloom is broken only by the uncertain light of the lamp's fitful glare; where the home, if we can desecrate the name, and the factory, if we can misapply the term, are one; where the atmosphere is damp, and fetid and diseased, and where little mites of humanity—children 6, 7 and 8 years of age are found sitting on damp and dirty floors making knee-pants for two and two and a half cents a pair, and averaging a wage rate of forty, sixty and seventy cents per week; and when these little ones are found pale, sickly and emaciated, and almost warped out of shape by such inhuman surroundings, and such inhuman toil, we can not wonder at crime and immorality in the community which engenders or at least allows, by its indifference, such conditions to prevail. When we see these things, and we have seen them, do you wonder why factory laws were brought into existence, or do you wonder why members of legitimate labor organizations ask, nay demand, the rigid enforcement of the factory laws that we now have in sixteen States, and the immediate enactment of the same salutary laws in the other twenty-eight.

In some States the factory laws are powerless to wipe out or even regulate such places as I have just described. If only members of the family are found at work therein, and no outsiders are brought in, they do not come under the operation of factory laws. One thing that members of labor organizations expect is, that the factory inspectors will see that the law is remedied so as to apply to just such places as these; that they are brought within the operation of humane, healthful and sanitary laws, and that any garment, any article made therein, is stamped with the proper tag of the "sweater." The fact that the knee-pants, the cloak, the cape, and the undergarments manufactured in these lowly abiding places of God's miserably poor, are for the merchant prince with a palatial store, does not make this place any the less a "sweater's den." Yes, the palatial store may be seventeen stories high as a result of this human misery, and it would have went a story or two higher, but the knee-pants bricks didn't hold out, and there wasn't human sweat, and blood, and tears enough, and enough crushed and shifted sand of human life to mix any more mortar. Do you wonder that the people cry to God against the barbarism of our modern civilization, and do you wonder that the members of labor organizations clamor for factory laws; and do you still subscribe money to civilize and Christianize the heathen in foreign climes? In God's name begin at home and try to Christianize and humanize your merchant princes. But some one may say: Oh, the merchant is not responsible for this condition of human affairs; he lets his work out by contract to a third party, who is the "sweater." Does this fact lessen the merchant's responsibility or minimize the curse, because he is too much afraid of the search-light of humanity to make his contracts direct. Don't say that these things are not so, that they are not, can not be real. I have seen them through no other eyes but my own, and they are matters of record in the departments of the government.

In conclusion, ladies and gentlemen, enforce the law, and hew rigidly and impartially to the line, regardless of where the chips may fall. When you have done this, you will have faithfully discharged your official trust, and will have performed all that is expected of you from the members of labor organizations.

Inspector Evan H. Davis, of Ohio, read a paper as follows:

THE REMOVAL OF DUST FROM WOOD-WORKING MACHINERY, AND HOW BEST IT CAN BE DONE.

Mr. President and Members of the Convention:

As factory inspectors, and guardians of the health and safety of factory workers, we are supposed to give good and satisfactory reasons for everything we do. Therefore, before undertaking to show how to extract dust from wood-working factories, it would be well to give reasons why it should be done. To do this, I found it necessary to look up authorities, and I was surprised to discover that of all that has been written as to the effects upon the human system through the inhalation of dust proceeding from mechanical processes, that upon information relative to wood-dust is very limited. From what I have seen upon the subject, it would not be unreasonable to conclude that, while the removal of wood-dust may be desirable, it can not be regarded as essential from a sanitary standpoint. In fact, where vegetable dust is mentioned, that produced from ordinary wood is considered harmless, unless it contains fine particles of sand or other insoluble substances. It is true that many woodworkers maintain that they are subject to pulmonary ailment as a result of their occupations, yet there is no data which goes to prove that lung trouble is more prevalent among that class of workers than among factory workers in general. One writer states that among carpenters and cabinet makers consumption prevails at a rate of fourteen to 100, which is only an excess of two per cent over the average among all classes in this country. And this excess, slight as it is, might reasonably be attributed to the posture or attitude in which these artisans usually perform their labors. However, carpenters and cabinet makers do not include to-day, that large body of men who work at woodworking machinery. And it would be rather an assumption to accept the above ratio as evidence that wood-dust inhalation is not particularly injurious.

That it is absolutely harmless those who have had any extended experience with woodworking machinery will hardly admit, however insufficient their information may be to warrant a contrary opinion. Woodworkers themselves claim that none but men of robust constitution and with well-developed breathing capacity should follow the trade, and that those disposed to catarrhal affections had better engage in other vocations. We know that the respiratory organs are exceedingly sensitive, and when compelled to receive any substance foreign to what nature designed, a strenuous effort is made to expel and cast it off again. If such effort fails, or if constant demand is made upon it, irritation and inflammation is likely to ensue, which will result sooner or later in some form of acute or actual ailment.

Sand-dust, it is admitted, conveyed into the bronchial tubes, will cause their impairment; and it has been known to have reached by some course the lung tissues puncturing them, and causing ulceration and final breaking down. Dust from very hard wood appears to partake somewhat of the nature of sand; is comparatively as indissoluble, and one might suppose would produce from inhalation a similar internal effect. The dust of mahogany and rosewood, and some men include black walnut, is regarded by woodworkers as baneful to health. It carries with it a pungent odor, which they say is very offensive and irritating to the respiratory system. Many of them claim that wood-dust ordinarily impairs the digestive organs, and insist that dyspepsia is their common enemy. Whether this be so or not, certain it is that the majority of young men and boys employed in washboard, pail and other light wood-ware factories have a pinched, undeveloped and pallid appearance. This may be due to the unripe age at which they begin their career as wage-earners, as much as to the nature of their employment, and probably it is due to both causes combined. However, I have never entered one of these factories without a certain impression that the boys employed therein were so at the sacrifice of their health.

But whether wood-dust is afflictive to health or not, there are other good reasons why it ought to be conveyed from the factory as rapidly as it is produced. To be compelled to labor in a shop where chips, shavings and saw-dust are allowed to accumulate, and lay around throughout the day, and where the atmosphere is constantly laden with the finer particles of refuse, may not be particularly unwholesome, but it certainly is a condition very disagreeable and undesirable. The worker in such a shop is at considerable of a disadvantage to perform as satisfactory labor as one employed where order and cleanliness is a requisite of his daily surroundings. His labor of itself is of a character which requires considerable care, and most diligent application of his attention at all times. His own security from danger largely depends upon his dexterity of hand and the vigilance with which he regards his machine, and nothing of a nature to irritate him or to divert his thought should be allowed to prevail. Whatever does this, simply decreases and retards his efficiency as a worker, and makes him more liable to accident and personal injury.

In these days of labor-saving machinery, and of labor-aiding appliances, it must be conceded that whatever contributes to the comfort and convenience of the factory employe is a source of economy to the factory owner. Money can not be used uselessly or unprofitably expended when applied to divest the workshop of everything of a hampering and obstructive character. With every dollar so expended, the place of toil to its occupants takes upon itself less the appearance of a place of task service. Workingmen work better, and produce more expeditiously and perfectly the wares they fashion, when a feeling of safety and comfort forces itself upon them. Environment is everything to every one. Do as we may, all are more or less controlled by, and subject to its influences. So it is in the factory; when it is clean, conveniently arranged, well aired, and in every respect a place where men feel like toiling with a cheerful and contented mind, the employer can always count upon the very best results.

There is another important view, and one from a standpoint of dollars and cents too, in which to regard this subject. The wood factory, where no provision is made for the speedy removal of its refuse, is a poor insurance risk. It is claimed that dust-conductors in the past have been the cause of some very destructive fires. This may be correct, but it is an argument in favor of adopting always a system of exhaust thoroughly efficient, and constructed upon scientific principles. Where fires can be traced to conductor pipes, it will be found that they were invariably fashioned from wooden boards, square shaped, and of equal dimensions throughout their entire length, and under no circumstances adopted to do adequate exhaust work. Of the refuse entering these tubes, the finer dust is never wholly extracted, but gathers and lodges in the corners and crevices of the boards, and only requires a spark from some source to ignite the whole mass.

People do not generally regard wood-dust as being explosive, but it is highly so, and when it is allowed to collect and accumulate inside the shop, a burning out some time may reasonably be expected. Wooden exhaust conductors are a waste of material to construct, and a waste of power and consequently of money afterwards to operate. They never did and never can work successfully, and it is not to be wondered at that men who know so little of the principle of pneumatics as to tolerate their construction, denounce exhaust systems in general as worthless.

The ordinary rate of insurance upon wood factories is much in excess of what other factories are rated, and while, if the proper precaution was taken for keeping down fires, there is no reason why a wood-shop would not be as safe a risk as a blacksmith or a machine shop. I have visited some wood factories where it seemed questionable to me that any company could afford to accept a risk upon them at any rate. Shavings and chips in heaps in every corner, with dust inches thick upon rafters, casings, and every projection it could settle upon, and the air so filled that a match struck in its midst would instantly set everything ablaze. I have been in other shops where a large number of machines were in operation, and yet the floors were kept scrupulously clean, and the air almost as pure and free from dust as that on the outside. Clearly the fire risk should be much less on the latter than the former shop.

Some time ago I had occasion to visit a locality where several wood factories are operated. The first shop to which I gave attention, had a partial system of exhaust. The fan appeared to be equal in power to what was required, but the tubing was a sort of agglomerated patched affair of wood and galvanized sheet-iron, and every workman in the shop was covered from head to foot with dust, and a twenty minutes inspection did as much for me.

Out of this shop I stepped across the street into another. Here I found everything neat, clean and orderly, for a powerful exhaust fan was in full operation. Every machine on both floors of this establishment was well hooded, and properly connected with the exhaust. The flying particles on either floor were almost imperceptible, and the contrast between the condition of working in both shops was so striking that I felt it my duty to make an order on the proprietor of the first visited shop to go and pattern after the doings of his neighbor.

The manager of the well ordered factory informed me that his exhaust system had cost him in the neighborhood of $500 — “but,” he said, “it pays to have it, and I would not go without it.” How did it pay? Liability of fire was lessened thereby, and this man’s employes were conditioned to work to their best capacity. These are some reasons why dust should be removed from wood factories. I will now endeavor to explain what in my judgment is the best means of doing it.

The first requisite of a good exhaust system is power and an exhauster built with a view of capacity and durability. An exhauster, I might state, is a fan having but one suction inlet; in this it is different to a blower, the latter having an air inflow on both sides. In selecting a fan, the nature of the work to be performed should be considered; it should be adapted in construction to accomplish just what is expected of it. It must have suction capacity equal to the weight and kind of wood refuse it is expected to carry. If a given weight is to be continually lifted and carried to the fan and then discharged, it is plain to be seen that certain suction power is necessary. This must be provided by having an exhauster of sufficient draft capacity with the requisite speed applied to it. It must be known that while power increases with speed, it does not correspondingly increase with the size of the exhauster. If a fan of given size and speed will produce a certain degree of power, a fan twice the size, with the same speed will not perform twice the amount of work. A small fan then, with attachments proportionate to its size, will do more work than a larger one, or otherwise, two small fans will accomplish more than one equal to both in size. This is important to know when it is desirable to secure the most suction with the least power.

If the machinery in a shop is so located as to require a very long exhaust pipe, it would require a larger fan than would a shorter pipe. Better results can be obtained by dividing the exhaust pipe into two parts and by operating two fans. This would not necessarily increase the cost to any great extent, for as the fans would be smaller the piping would be correspondingly less in area and would require lighter material in their construction.

There could be a further improvement by adopting in place of two fans a double exhauster; that is, two fans receiving from opposite directions operated by the same belt and from same counter shaft and pulley. This arrangement would provide a draft from opposite directions, while the discharge from both fans could be thrown into the same discharge pipe. It must be plain to anyone that the power of an exhauster decreases with the length of exhaust pipe, and that to obtain the requisite suction, speed and size of fan, must be increased relatively with the length of pipe. Besides, the longer the exhaust pipe the more numerous generally are the inlets or branch connections; therefore increased power of fan is required from that cause also. The size of a fan should be governed by the diameter of the main suction pipe. Allowing fifty or sixty feet as the maximum length, its area where it enters the fan should be at least equal to all its inlets. The work in a wood factory requires a suction of from three to six ounces, obviously, to obtain this; the pipe being properly adjusted, all depends upon the speed at which the fan is operated. Therefore the pulleys on main and counter shaft should be so adjusted as to produce such speed. This may be unnecessary to state, but in many factories much more satisfactory results could be obtained from exhaust fans already in use if this essential was more duly considered. Exhausters are frequently referred to as being too small, while if properly speeded and systematically piped would be fully equal to the demand made upon them. Every exhauster should be constructed without any bearing for the draft wheel on the inlet side, but on the operating side the pulley should be hung within a double bearing. It should only be located to avoid as much as possible all necessity for turns in the exhaust pipe, and as near as possible to machinery doing the heaviest work and requiring the largest branch pipes.

Next to securing a suitable exhauster, proper pipe connections should receive consideration. Too little apparently is known upon this important subject. Metal workers are frequently employed to pipe up exhausters who have not the first idea of the principles of pneumatics. The movement of air has never received a moment's attention from them; yet they undertake the work, and the factory owner, just as ignorant upon the subject, is satisfied that he has done all in his power for the comfort of his employes when the job is done and the bill of its cost is paid. Sometime later that factory owner learns there is a wrong and right way to do everything. In the first place, galvanized sheet iron is the proper material for exhaust tubing, and its weight should conform to the diameter or area surface to be provided for. Tin is sometimes used for smaller sizes of piping because it presents a smooth surface, but light-weight galvanized sheet-iron is preferable, being more rigid and less liable to impairment. The larger the diameter of the pipe the heavier should be the metal. The main suction pipe should be made to diminish in size as it recedes from the fan inlet proportionally with all its connections. In other words, if its farthest end from the fan is five inches in diameter, it should increase in size as each connection is added, until its area at the inlet aggregates the whole area of its branches. An authority states, "That it would be preferable to provide an excess of area for the main pipe of twenty per cent over what is obtained by calculating together the area of its connections." Another says, "Starting with five inches diameter for the smallest size for a main pipe, there should be added at least ten inches of sectional area for each machine that is connected, except for surfacing planers, which require twice as much." This excess would provide to some extent for the loss of power from area or surface friction.

All connecting pipes should be as short and have as few turns as possible, and should enter the main from the sides or top with a gradual inclination in the direction of velocity. While each pipe should be of suitable size to provide for the machine to which it is attached, it should not be larger than necessary, as an excess of area in such case would entail a waste of power. For the same reason, gates should be provided on all pipe openings, so that when the machine is idle, the suction may be cut off. Hand holes should be provided with tight fitting gates near all sharp bends, so as to allow for the removal of any obstruction that may become lodged therein. The last requisite of a good exhaust system, while not the least important is that of providing suitable connections between the branch pipes and the different machines, or, by bringing into as close contact with it as possible the mouth of the pipe, and in such form as is best adapted to secure adequate velocity in the hood and piping to collect and carry away the cast off material. The connecting appliance for each machine will vary in form with the construction of the machine, but the principle of successful operation is the same in all such appliances, that is, the opening of the inward flow of air to be equal of the area of the pipe. Planers and other cylindrical cutting machines are the most difficult to connect in this manner, as however long the cylinder may be, the suction must be distributed equally, or sufficiently powerful to all parts of the cutters to take up the dust, or other refuse. For this reason hoods adjusted to planers should fit tightly over the upper cylinder; entirely covering it, and should be so contracted in size where it connects with the pipe that the inflow there shall be of corresponding area with the pipe. This equality of area must be maintained in transforming the hood at its contracted part into the shape of the connected pipe. Ordinarily this care is not taken, but, when neglected, the best results are not secured. The lower cylinder of a planer should be provided with a hopper below, into which all refuse will drop, and thus partially filling the opening, it is to that extent contracted in inflow area, and increased suction follows. To properly pipe a planer will require as many as three branches, one from the upper hood, one from the hopper and one leading from the floor with a flattened opening to gather chips falling in the rear of the machine. The majority of woodworking machines can be provided with hopper attachments. In this number jointers and all kinds of saws can be included. The frame work of some jointers and buzz-saws make it difficult to adjust proper connections, but the exercise of a little ingenuity will generally overcome any such difficulty.

There is no dust creating machine but what has an opening below for cleaning away refuse; this in every case can be utilized and pipe connections inserted. Wood shapers can best be provided for with a flattened opening, butting against the table on the side toward which the dust is cast. For lathes, a hood receiver in line with the revolving spindle can be so arranged as not to interfere with the work. Sand surfacing machines are of various construction, those having a single large cylinder should have a casing enveloping the whole lower half of the wheel coming up in the rear in the form of a hood, and as near to the front as the work will admit. From this hood a flattened pipe opening should be attached, leading to the main pipe, and as I have already mentioned, the area of inflow to be maintained throughout the connection. I would suggest also that a channel about six inches wide and three inches deep, be provided in the bottom of the casing to contain a small supply of water to catch the dust escaping from the suction pipe. Other kinds of sand-surfacing machines can be provided with hood and hopper attachments, the construction of the machine suggesting the method of application.

All hoppers should have hand-openings as near to the floor as possible. Floors should be kept clean, by adjusting take-up pipes in different parts of the shop, the openings to be flattened and to rest on the floor and provided with shut-off gates.

Wood-working machines include such a wide range of inventions that it would be impossible to specialize what form of connection would be best adapted to every kind of machine, but sufficient has been given to suggest what may be done in every case.

In adjusting pipe-connections, it will rarely be found necessary to connect a branch-pipe larger than eight inches in diameter. If it should be deemed necessary to do so, two pipes of smaller area would give better results, or otherwise a divided hood leading to one branch pipe. The smaller-sized machinery ordinarily requires piping from three to six inches in diameter.

The discharge pipe is, of course, a part of an exhaust system, but all that is necessary to be said relative to it is, that it should be of proportionate size with the main pipe. I do not deem it important to know where and how the discharge is made, so long as it is carried to a receiver and out of the factory. But proper precaution should be taken to locate the receiver in such manner that no liability to fire is incurred thereby, and outlet enough should be provided for the escape of air from the room to prevent any possibility of back pressure upon the exhauster.

In conclusion, I would remark that there is no more reason why a dust exhaust system may not be constructed as perfectly as any other piece of mechanism built upon established principles. It is to-day a necessary adjunct of every well-ordered wood-working factory, and there are manufacturers who make a specialty of that class of work. Rules governing every part of construction are definable, and the person undertaking to do such work unacquainted with these rules, is incompetent to render satisfactory service for the money he receives. A manufacturer needs to obtain in this respect the very best for which he pays, and without counting the after cost in loss of power and inefficient results, frequently the first cost of a good exhaust system would be less than one constructed by incompetent workmen. Whether this be so or not, in exhausts, as in everything else, the rule applies, that whatever is needed to be done at all, needs to be done well, and the cheapest mechanical appliance is that which best performs what is required of it.

Chief Wade, of Massachusetts, read the following paper:

INSPECTION OF STEAM BOILERS UNDER STATE SUPERVISION.

Mr. President and Members of the Convention:

The subject to which I would ask your attention, is one that seems to me of great importance to any State, that seeks to protect the lives or to guard from injury those who toil for their daily bread, and are obliged to labor in places containing dangerous machinery over which they have no control.

The commonwealth of Massachusetts, early in the history of labor legislation, recognized the necessity of protecting the working people employed in manufacturing establishments from the dangers to which they were exposed by unprotected machinery. Other laws providing for the proper ventilation of work-rooms, adequate means of egress from buildings where operatives are employed, and laws looking to and providing for the safety and comfort of the industrial classes throughout the State, were subsequently enacted. But there was one link absent which, if inserted in the chain, would make our system of factory inspection as perfect as legislation could provide, and insure to the work people that the commonwealth is doing everything in its power to provide for them healthful work-rooms, and to secure safety to life and limb. This missing link in our factory inspection laws is that of boiler inspection and the proper supervision over those in charge of them.

It is not necessary to point out the danger attending the operation of steam boilers. Yet, one is apt to forget, until some casualty occurs, which forcibly reminds them of a danger unforeseen. "Familiarity breeds contempt;" this is as true of the steam-boiler as in other things, and after passing by or working near a steam boiler under pressure, we begin to look less shyly at it, and to regard its danger as less real; but it is still there, and the pressure of the steam within the boiler is ever searching unceasingly for the weak spot upon which it can exert its point of energy, and deal death and destruction with a liberal hand. If, when you go to your hotel some day or retire for the night, you were to be told that beneath there was a 100 pound keg of powder with a lighted candle upon the head, you would feel rather uncomfortable and uncertain as to what might happen. It would be safe to say that no one would dare to run the risk of the fire from that candle reaching the powder. Yet just such condition of affairs exists under every hotel having a boiler under steam pressure in its basement. It would be a very easy matter to figure out to your satisfaction that the energy in a common boiler under steam is capable of being let loose by a little carelessness as readily as with the powder magazine. Certainly, if those who lost their lives, thirty or more, but a short time ago by the explosion of the boiler of the Park Central Hotel in Hartford, Conn., could have known that fatal night of the condition of the boiler beneath them, they would have felt less at ease. The morning will never tell them, for they had seen the setting sun for the last time.

It would be only true to say that those people had no assurance that the State had provided for their safety by any law looking to the careful inspection of steam boilers. Many States recognize the importance of fire-escapes, and look after the safety of the building itself from fire and insecure construction. Should it not also look after the safety of those who occupy the building by requiring that all the safeguards possible should be provided in the use of steam boilers used upon the premises? What is true of the duty of the State towards the traveler is also true of the work people who are obliged to labor near these machines. They know but little, if anything, of its dangers; they rely upon the employers, and if from fear through any cause, have no means of protest except to leave their positions, and, perchance, the next place may be even worse. Thousands of instances might be cited of workmen who have been killed or maimed for life by the explosion of their employer's boilers.

Very seldom by process of law does the maimed and innocent employe recover compensation for the injury received. The State also owes protection to its citizens whose duty may lead them to pass near an establishment whose boilers are under pressure. In many cities boilers are under the sidewalk, or just within the line. The explosion of one of these would be fatal to the passers-by upon the street. The reasons that have led the State to enact laws which we, as factory inspectors, are required to enforce, and which have resulted, as you can all testify, by giving the greatest security to those whose only capital in their daily labor, and who live by manual toil, are well known.

The importance of this subject I have recognized for many years, and at the last session of the Legislature, at my suggestion, a law was enacted providing that a competent person should be appointed, whose duty it should be to inspect boilers not already under inspection by boiler insurance companies, and to inquire into the competency of those having charge of them. Such an officer was appointed, and the results of his investigations thus far have clearly demonstrated to my mind that in Massachusetts some law should be enacted which would insure the greatest safety from dangerous steam boilers, and to provide for their removal when unfit for further use. The conditions in which many boilers have been found in my own State will be found in other States, neglect and unskilled attention, and equal disregard for the interest of the laborer in the matter.

The practice of keeping a boiler in use as long as it will hold water without too much leakage, and provide steam, should be prevented by the most stringent laws. I am told by good authority that as disastrous an explosion may occur when a boiler is under low pressure as under high pressure, for it is the large volume of heated water in the boiler suddenly turned into steam by the release of the pressure upon it that makes the explosion so far-reaching in its effects. It is a mistaken idea that a boiler can do little damage under low pressure.

It has been reported to me that in a large factory in Massachusetts there were four boilers, and within a radius of fifty feet were working from seventy-five to 100 persons. Two of these boilers were in good condition, but the other two showed upon their fronts the marks of the hard usage they had been subjected to. A thorough inspection of these boilers was made, and a large extent of corrosion found at all the seams. The inspector scraped the rust partially away, and very few signs of good iron were apparent, yet determined to find how deep the corrosion was he scraped until before long he found that he had scraped a hole through that boiler shell. Within a short time several holes had been made in that boiler simply by scraping the corrosion away. And yet that boiler, with all that unsoundness around one seam, was daily subjected to a pressure of sixty pounds, and the lives of nearly 100 people hanging upon the slightest mishap. What had the proprietor to say to such a condition of affairs? When the inspector pointed it out to him, he simply wanted to know if it could not be fixed somehow. "We have to run some risk in this world," was his remark. Yes, he ran a risk and was willing to do it, but how about those who were unconscious workers near that dangerous boiler? He backed his risk by his chance of losing money, but they staked their lives on the risk. He had not thought of them; they could work elsewhere.

At another place where the proprietor wanted "no interference from the State," the boilers were all found defective in some particulars, but one of them was totally unfit for use. The plate of which the boiler was made was of such poor material originally, and had been burned so much that the iron could be peeled off. One of the pieces so peeled off was over nine inches across, and of a thickness that took half the depth of the plate away. In the rooms directly over this boiler were a large number of girls, and an accident to this boiler means a large loss of life and fatality from the scalding water. What did this proprietor say? "I'm the only one who has anything to lose if those boilers go up, so I am the only one interested." "What about those girls up there?" was asked; "are they not interested?" and all he could reply was, "Let them look out for themselves." Now, there are no doubt a large number of men who are running dangerous boilers who feel this way, but let us ask: How is a girl working near a dangerous boiler, in such cases as I have cited, going to look out for herself? She expects her employer to guard her safety, and even if she knew the danger, we have no laws that can step in and say, "You can not endanger the lives of these people, by running that boiler." The people "are interested" as affectively as any one can be, for they have that to lose that can not be bought, and no selfish employer should be allowed to set his desire for gold against their lives.

Now, these proprietors, and other cases can be given, knew something of the danger in these boilers, for their engineers had warned them. They were mostly second-hand boilers, or some thrown out as worthless by other concerns, and there are doubtless a large number that have not yet come to our notice. They are each year becoming more numerous, because the crop of boilers sold by good concerns as unfit for their use has been a large one, and is each year being added to.

In another case the inspector found a boiler in the midst of a crowded tenement district, but could not find the attendant, although the boiler was supplying steam for an engine. The boiler was not provided with a water glass, but three gauge cocks were stuck through the setting from the side of the boiler at the rear. Trying the lower of these cocks, he found that the water was below its level. There was fifty pounds of steam on, and as there was no way of ascertaining how much water was in the boiler, a more extended hunt for the engineer found him patching the roof. "How do they expect me to run that splitter, patch roofs, sweep up after everybody, and run this boiler too?" was his first remark. He tried the gauge cock, saw there was no water, and started the pump as coolly as though finding no water was a common occurrence. It was ten minutes before the water got to a level to show in the lower gauge cock, although at no time should it be below this level. Naturally if this was a common occurrence, that boiler could not be in good order, and on opening the doors of the front, eight of the tubes were found badly leaking, and the tube sheet badly corroded. Other defects also appeared, and the boiler was unquestionably a dangerous one. The engineer, however, did not profess to be one worthy of the name. He knew very little about a boiler, except to fire it, and so paid no attention to the matter of safety, and if he had thought of it, would not have known what to do to make the boiler more secure.

This experience shows the necessity of having some one in charge who is competent to fill the position, and many cases illustrating the ignorance of those in charge of boilers could be given.

At one large plant four of the boilers were not provided with steam gauges, and the safety valves were arranged in such a manner that they were "safety" valves in name only. It is a common occurrence to find a safety valve so corroded that it can not be moved, and a common occurrence to find them rendered inoperative by being tied down or over-weighted, or even so close to the ceiling that their levers can not lift.

In another case the brickwork in which the boiler was set was so cracked and defective that the boiler was in imminent danger of falling from its setting.

In other places no means was found to blow off the boiler at such frequent intervals as will keep the boiler clean on the inside. This is a common occurrence.

In one place, along the inside of the boiler, on the bottom of the shell, the inspector found an accumulation of dirt and scale over three inches thick, thus preventing the water taking the heat passing into the shell of the boiler. You might be tempted to ask why that boiler did not burn out on the bottom. The only reason was that the furnace was filled so much with soot and ashes that the dirt touched the bottom of the shell, and the fire was compelled to hug the sides of the boiler, thus keeping it from the part where the scale was inside. It isn't safe to say that "two wrongs make a right," but here was certainly a case where neglect both inside and outside saved a boiler from injury. If the fireman had been a little less lazy and cleaned out that furnace occasionally, it would have been bad for that boiler, when its internal condition is considered.

I cite these few of many cases to show in what direction the neglect of boilers lies. There are owners who will run a boiler no matter how dangerous, so long as it will hold together.

There are men who will not hire a person competent to care for their boilers, either permanently as an engineer, or occasionally, except in absolute necessity. And there are men who represent to their employer that they are thoroughly competent to look after a boiler when in reality they do not possess the skill necessary to the boiler's demands. The combination of all these conditions, or either one of them, will soon put a boiler in such a position as to be a danger to the public, and some legislation governing these matters should be brought about. I am not prepared to say yet as to the details of such legislative act, but, broadly speaking, the inspection of boilers at a stated period should be provided for, a thorough internal and external inspection by a thoroughly competent man, the examination of those in charge, and provision made for a safety valve that can be locked at a certain pressure by the inspector.

To show the importance that the national government attaches to this matter, it may be cited that no boiler for use on steam vessels of any kind can be built until the material for the shell has been tested and approved by government inspectors, and stamped with this approval upon the plate. No marine boiler can be used without a certificate of safety from the inspector, and this certificate is for one year only, and granted only after a thorough examination of the boiler, inside and outside. The engineers in charge must be examined, and can receive a license to run such marine engine and boiler only when the examination proves them to be qualified.

Let us, as inspectors, use our best efforts to secure legislation in our respective States and provinces which will afford protection from the use of dangerous steam boilers.

The report of the committee on finance was presented by Mrs. McEnery, of Pennsylvania.

We, your committee on finance, respectfully recommend as follows:

1. That funds be raised for the purpose of defraying expenses of the association by assessing each State represented to the amount of ten dollars.

2. That all States prepared to pay said assessment to do so previous to the final adjournment of the convention.

Mr. McKay, Deputy Inspector of New York, read a paper on the following subject:

THE SWEATING SYSTEM.

Mr. President and Members of the Convention :

What is the sweating system? This question is one which has been answered so different by persons who have given testimony before governmental committees, that I am of the opinion it will be well to cite a few of them. The following evidence was given last year before the Committee on Manufacture of the House of Representatives, when investigating the sweating system. A member of a committee appointed to investigate it in Chicago describes it as a system where "the work is taken out by sweaters. They go to the large firms and make a contract for so much work at such a price, and then they employ men, women and children, and pay their wages at the very lowest, and work them not less than ten hours per day, and some of them work eighteen hours per day, and in many cases on Sunday. In some of these places they board the workers." A custom tailor of Chicago testified that it is a system where "a man is not guaranteed but that his suit may be made up in a kitchen where dirty linen is being washed."

A cloakmaker gives the meaning to be where a man takes work home, and he has the use of his wife and children and neighbors. He employs others; these are the germs of the sweat-shop. Sweat shops are shops at home; and now they have grown, by reason of employing more and more, into a factory. * * * The nuisance was brought about because the people can work longer than in a factory."

A Boston clothing cutter says: "It is the giving out of work to be made in tenement houses, or in shops, in fact, at a price which is lower than it can be done in shops. They may state a certain price, and then keep increasing the amount of work that they require for that price."

Another clothing cutter of Boston defines it to be "where work is given out to contractors, and they in turn giving it out to others, receiving a profit therefor and doing no labor."

The secretary of the Anti-Tenement-House League of Boston describes it as "the system of making clothing under filthy and inhuman conditions."

A journeyman coatmaker understands it "to mean where men are employed under unhealthy conditions and on wages not sufficient to give them a comfortable livelihood."

A clothing contractor of Boston says it is "a class of people employed making garments at a dollar or a dollar and a quarter, where they should receive two dollars or two and a half."

A clothing operator, of the same city, says "it doesn't mean solely the tenement-house work; it means the conditions that exist under which the work is done. It is a system by which, under the piece-price arrangements, people are compelled to work for wages too low for the work that they do."

Another Boston tailor describes it as "that impediment of that element which stands between me and capital, or, in other words, the contract system."

The secretary of the Journeymen Tailors' Union of America says, "it is a system under which work is given out to a contractor by the manufacturer, and by the contractor sublet to a workman who makes their work. The meaning is, in our understanding, that the contractor sweats something out of the employes, out of the people who work for him."

The select committee appointed by the House of Lords to consider the evidence relating to the sweating system in the United Kingdom, after having examined 291 witnesses, including clergymen, physicians, representatives of trade societies, health officers, factory and sanitary inspectors, journalists, manufacturers, middlemen, managers, superintendents, factory hands, home workers, and others, as to the pervulence of sweating in fourteen different trades, and in the larger cities of Great Britain, reports that: "The replies received were neither clear nor consistent. It was urged by some that sweating is an abuse of the sub-contract system, and consequently that there can be no sweating where there is no sub-contracting. Others, on the contrary, maintained that sub-contracting is by no means a necessary element of sweating, which consists according to them, in taking advantage of the necessities of the poorer and more helpless class of workers, either by forcing them to work too hard or too long, or under insanitary conditions, or for starvation wages, or by exacting what some witnesses call an undue profit out of their labor."

Mr. Arnold White, who testified before the committee, observed "that the broadest definition he can give to the term sweating is the process of grinding the faces of the poor."

After stating that they considered their inquiry should embrace "the means employed to take advantage of the necessities of the poorer and helpless class of workers, the conditions under which such workers live, the causes that have conduced to the state of things disclosed, and the remedies proposed," the committee reports that "ample evidence having been brought before us on every matter comprised within its scope, we are of the opinion that although we can not assign an exact meaning to 'sweating,' the evils known by that name are shown to be an unduly low rate of wages, excessive hours of labor, and the insanitary state of the houses in which the work is carried on." They also state that "these evils can hardly be exaggerated. The earnings of the lowest classes of workers are barely sufficient to sustain existence. The hours of labor are such as to make the lives of the workers periods of careless toil, hard and unlovely to the last degree. The sanitary condition under which the work is conducted are not only injurious to the health of the persons employed, but are dangerous to the public, in the case of the trades concerned in making clothes, as infectious diseases are spread by the sale of garments made in rooms inhabited by persons suffering from smallpox and other diseases," and adds that they "make the above statements on evidence of the truth of which we are fully satisfied."

After listening to the various opinions of those who have had more or less to do with what is known as the "sweating system," one is at a loss to know what it really is; but I am inclined to the belief that it is best described in the report just referred to. It says: "But though the term 'sweating system' is vague, and seems incapable of accurate and common interpretation, it is well recognized in the trades as signifying a system under which certain industries are carried on, and as implying certain conditions affecting the labor employed therein. In so far as it signifies a system, it may be expressed as a development of sub-contracting and of the subdivision of work; considered as a condition affecting labor, it involves excessive hours of work, insufficient remuneration, and the employment of labor under conditions prejudicial to physical and moral health. * * * 'Sweating' has somewhat different significations in different trades, and there is much controversy as to the persons to whom it can be rightly applied; but when we come to deal with the facts, we find that there exists in London and other large cities a considerable class of workers who are unable to deal directly with a bona fide employer, and who are compelled to accept whatever terms may be offered by a middleman or a sub-contractor. The middleman soon discovers that, as a general rule, he has at his disposal an overcrowded labor market, and that a large proportion of the persons who fill it are without friends, organization, or the means of obtaining help. * * *

Many are in total ignorance of, and most of them have but an imperfect dexterity in the trades which they profess to practice. By taking advantages of these circumstances, the sweater, who may either be a mere go-between, possessing no knowledge whatever of the trade by which he lives, or a workman little better off in any respect than the person he employs, is enabled to get this class entirely into his power, and the usual result is that he works them as many hours and for whatever wages he may think proper to fix. He has nothing to fear from combination against him, for the ranks of the sweated class are continually enlarged by foreign immigration. These people are ignorant of the country in which they find themselves, and of the laws to which they would often have a right to appeal for protection."

The sweating system commenced through competition, and it has for some time past been suffering from the same cause. The sweaters began by reducing the profits of the ordinary tradesman, and by lowering the price of labor. But their number increases, one sweater makes war upon the other, and still the demand for cheapness is not satisfied. His profits diminish, and he cuts down the wages of his miserable work-people to a lower point than ever. It is a fact, that every year the prices are being lowered, which can only be accounted for by the competition and rivalry of the sweaters with each other.

One of the victims of the system (a woman who had worked at finishing on trousers for twenty-two years), on being asked if she could account for the continued reduction of wages, answered: "There are so many of these foreign Jews, who come and take it one against the other; one will go in and do it so much cheaper than another, and that is how it is the work is brought down as it is; that is how the trade is brought down."

There is certainly more truth than poetry in that answer, as anyone who has dealings with the sweaters can testify, although there are unscrupulous contractors of other nationalities and creeds. In a letter from the chief of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labor to Congressman Sherman Hoar, it is stated that of the thirty-three Boston contractors from whom returns were received, twenty-six were Hebrews, and that of the 1,107 employes, 931 were employed by them. The report of the New York Factory Inspector for the last year says: "There seems to be some sort of an arrangement, the precise nature of which it is difficult to determine, by which the Polish and Russian Jewish immigrants are controlled so that they may be easily congregated and utilized in the clothing trades. * * * Whatever may be the impelling cause of this, it is certain that their employers are nearly always compatriots and co-religionists, who, having been here longer and become familiar with the language and customs of the country, do not scruple to take advantage of the ignorance and poverty of their newly arrived brethren. The very much reduced rate of wages which has been accepted by these immigrants, has naturally resulted in cutting down the prices paid to the skilled workmen in the trade."

It has been told me very often by contractors that they are compelled to accept the prices offered by the wholesalers, or, if they did not, some one else would take the same work for a less price; thus bearing out the statement that the competition and rivalry of the sweaters are the principal causes of the reduction of wages.

The wholesale house which gives out the work may allege that it knows nothing about sweating, and employs no sweaters. Its business is to get its work done as low as possible. It does not inquire into the circumstances of the man or woman who makes the goods. Yet it would not be too much to expect that the large houses, which charge the highest prices to their customers, on the ground that they supply the best article, should take ordinary care to ascertain that a fair price is also paid for the labor they employ, and that the people who do their work are not deprived by sweaters of the wages to which they are honestly entitled. It ought not to be impossible for establishments of public repute to make sure that they are not being turned into buttresses for the sweating system.

As regards the excessive hours of labor in sweat shops. I do not believe that any one will deny the truth of the statement of the House of Lords committee, that they "are such as to make the lives of the workers periods of ceaseless toil"—for it is borne out by the testimony of a large number of witnesses whom they examined—or that of the congressional committee when it says: "As to hours there is practically no limit except the endurance of the employe, the work not merely being paid for by the task, but the task so adjusted as practically to drive from the shop each employe who is not willing to work on the limit of physical endurance, the hours of labor, under this system, rarely being less than twelve, generally thirteen or fourteen, and frequently from fifteen to eighteen hours in the twenty-four." The evidence brought before both of those committees were so conclusive on that point that they agree that it is one of the worst features of the sweating system.

Now as to the sanitary—or, rather, insanitary—state of the places where sweating is carried on. In the case of the tenement-house shop it is deplorable in the extreme. It is rarely healthy or clean, while filth and noxious odors are abundant. It is on record that in the city of Chicago there was a rear sweat shop, the yard of which is nothing more than a garbage receptacle. The dirty rags, ashes, and decayed garbage, together with the foul odors that issue from two unclean closets, show great neglect as to the healthful and sanitary conditions. In another place in the same city there was an apartment, the front room of which was used as a shop in which sixteen people were at work. In another room was a dirty bed, on which there was a sick child, while in the kitchen and dining-room the week's wash was being dried by a hot stove. The sanitary conditions were poor, while the open vaults were in a bad condition. Still another was that of a cloakmaker, who used one room for his shop, while the other three rooms were supposed to be used for domestic purposes only, his family consisting of his wife and seven children. In the room adjoining the shop, used as the kitchen, there was a red-hot stove, two tables, a clothes rack, and several piles of goods. A woman was making bread on a table upon which there was a baby's stocking, scraps of cloth, several old tin cans, and a small pile of unfinished garments. In the next room was an old woman with a diseased face walking the floor with a crying child in her arms.

In Boston there was found a place consisting of two rooms, occupied by a man, wife, and four children, with several boarders or guests, the latter lying about in a way to indicate that they were decidedly at home. Upon the bed were piled the goods ready to be made up. The stench and filth were such as to make it impossible for the investigating committee to remain in them, while the closets were a mass of filth. Another place visited by the committee was decidedly filthy, and clothing was being made up and stacked upon the beds. In still another were found a man and his wife, three children, a girl cousin and two employes, occupying three rooms, the entire space being twenty by eighteen feet. Cooking, eating, sleeping and working were being carried on in the same room, and the goods were piled upon the beds and the tables where the food lay. The filth was nauseating, and the committee could hardly complete its inspection.

In New York the committee reports, from a personal inspection, that in one place the stench in the halls was nauseating, and in another house in which sweaters abound, they found the premises filthy and the stench abominable. In nearly all the places visited by them they found very little discrimination being shown between the work-rooms and the living rooms, piles of clothing being heaped up in all available places, and children running and playing in any or all of the rooms with impunity.

The evidence taken in Great Britain is of a similar character, and goes to show that wherever sweating is carried on, the shops, as a rule, are in anything but a cleanly condition, and the danger from the filth and obnoxious smells that abound therein to those employed, is only equalled to that which may be caused by the spread of infectious diseases, through clothing being carried to different parts of the country after being made up under those conditions and in such places as that where a clergyman testified that he knew of a case of a child with measles being covered by one of the garments.

I again quote from the report of the Parliamentary committee: "It is only necessary to add that the unhealthy conditions under which sweating is carried on threaten serious dangers, not only to the sweaters themselves, but to the rest of the community. There can be little doubt that outbreaks of scarlet fever and other infectious and contagious diseases would frequently be traced to the pestilential work-rooms of crowded cities. On this point the evidence of competent witnesses is quite conclusive. 'I have seen,' said the physician to the North London Hospital for Consumption, 'patients ill with scarlet fever, kept at home, from want of recognition of the disease, all through the complaint, and their parents, or, at all events, their father, working in the same room with them as tailors; and in that case, of course, the garments that he made might very possibly carry infection to wherever they were taken.' Measles can be carried about in this way, without the least chance of its origin being traced. Thus, parents who buy knickerbocker and other suits for their children at the wholesale sweaters, may unconsciously be conveying to them a malignant disease. And it must be remembered that the shops of these wholesale sweaters are not always situated in the poorer districts of London. The danger extends all over the metropolis. In one instance a case of smallpox was in the house, and the mother of the child did the button-holes for the post-office coats." An health officer testifies: "I have visited patients suffering from smallpox and scarlet fever in rooms where half-finished garments were used to cover up and keep the patient warm."

In view of all this testimony, can it be possible that any sane person can be found who will defend the "sweating system?"

Many of the leading clothing manufacturers of the United States have admitted that they do not know in what kind of places the goods they give out to contractors are made up. That they certainly should know goes without saying. In that connection, Hon. Roswell P. Flower, Governor of New York, in his annual message to the Legislature of that State, referring to the "sweating system" section of the Factory Law, says: "The present law does not go far enough to remedy all the evils which have grown up under this system. If the manufacturer escapes the responsibility and expense of running a factory, he should be compelled to keep a register of those who are making up his goods, and no person should be given work who could not produce a certificate from an inspector stating that he occupied healthy and suitable quarters for the purpose of manufacturing. This would be a proper amendment to the present law, and the importance of the subject, it seems to me, warrants its careful consideration."

The question of how to abolish the sweating system is one that has received considerable attention in some States, particularly in Massachusetts, Illinois, and New York, where laws on the subject have been enacted, and a vast amount of good accomplished; but much remains still to be done. In New York city and vicinity, during the past year, there have been upward of 100 prosecutions for violations of the Factory Law — principally the anti-sweating section — and they have been generally successful, and the offenders fined. It has had the effect there of causing a demand for shops; and the number of shop buildings recently erected and in course of erection on the east side, presumably for the manufacture of clothing, bears evidence that the tenement-house sweater has come to the conclusion that he will no longer be allowed to use his living apartments for manufacturing purposes.

Various remedies have been proposed, among others the following: The prohibition of any and all processes of manufacture in buildings erected for dwellings; that all buildings used for manufacturing purposes must be made to conform in sanitary and other requirements of State laws; that all manufacturing establishments shall be licensed by the State, said license to be issued to the actual manufacturer or firm, and not to the sweater; that the State require that all manufacturers mark their goods offered for sale with such label as will inform the intended purchaser or the public that they had been made according to the requirements of law; that a tag or label be attached to all goods made in a tenement-house bearing the words "Tenement-house made;" and that the manufacturer has his goods made under his own supervision, and under healthy and comfortable conditions.

Upon reviewing these proposals, I am of the opinion that by combining the first and last of them, we would come nearer abolishing the system than by adopting any or all of the others, although I am aware that some of them, especially the use of the tag or label, have done a great deal toward remedying the evil.

As factory inspectors, let us consider well this question, for it is one of grave moment to the entire community; and if nothing more can be done by this convention; let us, at least, request the States that have no law on this subject to enact them as soon as possible, and those that already have them to make them more stringent and provide the proper and necessary means to enforce them.

I know of no more fitting language in closing than that used in one of the reports already quoted, as follows: "We can not conclude without expressing our earnest hope that the exposure of the evils which have been brought to our notice will induce capitalists to pay closer attention to the conditions under which the labor which supplies them with goods is conducted, and that the public will withhold their custom from traders who are known to conduct their business on a system which regards neither the welfare of the workman nor the quality of the work produced."

Inspector Dyson, of Massachusetts, read a paper as follows:

HOW HE WORKED FORTY YEARS AGO.

Mr. President and Members of the Convention :

In those days the laws had not found out that there were such institutions as mills. Legislatures had not learned the time of the sun's rising and the going down thereof. Often before the sun began his course to mark the day we were at work, and quit by the light of the bright and gorgeous moon. There were no legislative acts controlling the employment of labor then.

It was not until the year 1874, that the Legislature of Massachusetts passed a law prohibiting the employment of women and children more than ten hours a day. For over three years this law was a dead letter because the statute itself was faulty and inoperative, and there was no one even then to call public attention to this state of things. Laws do not generally enforce themselves.

In 1877, factory inspectors were born in Massachusetts, a new species of the human family, and they have been increasing and multiplying ever since, also in other States. From this time the question of labor has received more or less consideration from each succeeding legislation. To-day the hours of labor in mechanical and manufacturing establishments are fifty-eight per week for women and children. Contrast this with the condition of affairs forty years ago. We went slowly and quietly to work, after our regular morning prayers, at 5 o'clock. We were released at 6.30 for breakfast, and were rung back again at 7 o'clock. Noon came, and we were given thirty minutes, from 12 to 12.30, for dinner. At 7.30 in the evening we were rung out, after working thirteen and one-half hours per day. Multiply that thirteen and one-half by six, and you will get eighty-one, the number of hours a week we worked. A difference of twenty-three hours a week in favor of forty years ago.

Notwithstanding all our work in those early days we were not unhappy. In the evening we indulged in such rousing fun as walking around town for an hour or so, and by 9.30 o'clock were fast asleep. Sundays and holidays we roamed about the fields, enjoying ourselves as boys do and can. In confidence I will tell you that as I grew older many a Saturday night I walked to Worcester and back, making a journey of eighteen miles.

I well remember when the manufacturers, by general consent, reduced the hours from thirteen and one-half to twelve per day. This was due partly to labor agitation and partly to the generosity and kindness of the proprietors of the mills. We hailed this reduction as the dawn of the new era; we celebrated the event with as much ardor as ever we put into a Fourth of July jollification. We didn't get much in those days, and when we did get anything, we were thankful and rejoiced accordingly.

To-day, with the hours of labor regulated by law and reduced to fifty-eight per week, are the employers more benefited than they were in any time of long days ?

Let it be remembered that the gradual reduction in the hours of labor has been met by the manufacturers with improved machinery. This machinery demands so much additional care, such constant attention, that it is a question whether slow machinery and long hours, or fast machinery and short hours, are the most favorable to the wage-worker.

Undoubtedly all labor legislation is intended in some way to be of benefit to the employe, but here is a condition where the Legislatures have stopped short of their whole duty. Has not the time arrived for our Legislature to take one more forward step and restrict the speed at which machinery should be run ?

A mule spinner forty years ago cared for 600 spindles, two and one-half stretches per minute, doffing twice a day, in 1867 and 1868 increased to three and one-half stretches. To-day the mule spinner cares for from 1,200 to 1,600 spindles, making from four to five stretches in sixty to sixty-four seconds, doffing four times a day without any material change of stock, which means that the spinner on account of the increased breaking of ends, must be constantly passing from one end of his carriage to the other, with no opportunity or chance to even lean against a post to rest his weary and tired body.

Again, the weaver whose loom formerly ran from sixty to seventy picks per minute, now runs from 120 to 130 picks on woolen goods, and on cotton looms the picks are increased in the same proportion.

Did you ever look back and think of the change forty years have wrought ? I will select one example. Forty years ago Fall River, in my State, had 100,320 spindles in operation. To-day there are 2,520,490 spindles in operation, an increase of nearly 2,500,000.

In a textile mill there is a very small fraction of the work that requires muscular strength. But it is the constant and steady application of the mind, the eager use of the eyes which exhaust and wear out the human body.

The entire nervous system is so intently directed to the detail of the work while the machinery is running to its utmost capacity, that by night the worker is not only tired and weary, but well nigh worn out.

Do not think that I am advocating a return to longer hours, far from it. I know what they mean to the employe. Often in the days of forty years ago, I fell from my bench fast asleep to be awakened by the boot end of an overseer or by the sweet lullaby of a broomstick. Still, I was happy.

Look at the factory operatives to-day. A few years' work in the mill gives him that tired, worn, pale, exhausted appearance which is pitiable in the extreme. His bent form and round shoulders make a fit subject for consumption and other diseases of the throat and lungs. He does not have any better food or clothes than we did forty years ago, working without the assistance of the benign influence of legislative acts.

See what the Massachusetts legislature has done for wage-workers:

Ten hours per day for women and children, which practically means the same for men.

The guarding of dangerous machinery, including elevators and elevator wells,

The employment of factory inspectors.

Compelling every person or corporation employing females in manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishments, to provide seats for the same.

Limiting the age when children should be allowed to work.

Weekly payments by all corporations.

Prohibiting the employment of women and minors between the hours of ten at night and six in the morning.

Providing for means of egress, and prohibiting the locking of doors in mills and workshops.

The fifty-eight-hour law, and numerous other acts for the better protection of the lives and health of our mill operatives.

A few years ago I was summoned before a legislative committee to give evidence in a hearing concerning workers in mills. A well-known manufacturer, who was present at the hearing, pointed to me as a healthy, good-looking specimen of a factory operative. Forty years ago there were other healthy, good-looking factory operatives, but to-day they are not numerous.

When I was in the mill and at the time I left, a worker had a chance to sit down to rest while his machine was running and the overseer away. A man's whole system was not keyed up to a breaking tension. No wonder that the wage-workers to-day are asking for shorter hours.

It is a surprise to me that the manufacturers can not see the handwriting on the wall, that the limit of human endurance has been reached.

And, ladies and gentlemen, I think it is within the province of this body to carefully study this subject and to recommend such legislation as would give the factory operative of to-day a longer period of life.

The following paper was read by Inspector Ducomb, of Ohio:

THEATERS, HOW THEY SHOULD BE BUILT AND ARRANGED.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Convention :

The subject which has been assigned to me — the construction of public buildings — is one, which by reason of its vital importance, should possibly have been assigned to some one of our members whose experience in this particular branch of the profession would cause greater weight to be attached to whatever remarks or suggestions he might make.

The many terrible disasters which have taken place in this and other countries as a direct result of the improper construction of opera-houses and places of amusement, has made the subject of their proper construction one of general study among architects and builders, and the fact that accidents of this character are yearly becoming less frequent is conclusive proof that their efforts to provide the people of the country with safer and more convenient places of amusement, have not been in vain.

The limited time allotted to me for the expression of my views upon this most important subject will permit of only a general statement of what I consider to be the best plans to be followed in the construction of an opera-house, where the safety and comfort of the audience are both to be considered, and, indeed, the fact that so many of my auditors are men who have given this subject much more thought and consideration than I have been able to devote to it, makes this limited character of my remarks a cause for mutual congratulation; to them, that they will be bored for so short a period, and to me that I will be obliged to parade such a small portion of my lack of knowledge upon the subject.

In the first place, an opera-house or other building intended as a place of amusement, should be limited by law to a height of two stories, and should, in like manner, be limited to construction upon what in real estate parlance are known as "corner lots," in order that sufficient means of exit can be obtained in case of fire or panics. A location upon the northwest corner of a square, with the main entrance upon the street running north and south, is, to my mind, the most convenient for this purpose, but it is a matter of minor importance, the valuation of the real estate in most cases deciding the location of the building.

The stage, auditorium and lobby should occupy the lower floor, while the upper one is taken up with a gallery, resting upon an oval row of supports, which form the only obstructions on the floor of the auditorium, and which should be arranged in the manner which will cause the least inconvenience to the audience, both as to a clear and unobstructed view of the stage, and as a matter of convenience in going to and from their seats.

The stage, with its wings, should occupy the entire rear portion of the building, with, at least, two exits upon the alley, with a large double door opening direct upon the alley, for the reception of special scenery, properties, etc.

The lobby should extend the entire front of the building, with the exception of two spaces at either end, to be occupied by stairways leading from the galleries on the second floor. The box office should be situated at one side of the lobby, at a point sufficiently removed from the main entrance to the auditorium that the persons purchasing tickets and those entering the auditorium will in no way conflict with each other.

The private boxes should be built at the sides of the stage, and are to be entered from the rear by means of the passageway leading to the stage, both from the auditorium and the gallery.

The second floor should be entered by means of the two stairways at the ends of the lobby, which have already been mentioned, and which should open direct upon the street. This will prevent the mingling of the crowds from the lower and upper floors until the street is reached, which will be a matter not only of great convenience to the people, but will also greatly reduce the possibility of loss of life in case of fire or panics; exits from the second floor should also be provided by way of the wings or stage.

The lighting and heating apparatus should be located in the basement, and should be of the latest design and best quality obtainable. The heating should be effected either by steam or hot-air pipes, and the lighting should be by electricity, as this is universally conceded to be the best and most convenient light for this purpose, and experience has proved that a separate plant for this purpose is not only a great convenience, but that in the long run it will prove an economical venture. Duplicate dynamos should be provided in anticipation of any breakage that may occur, and the entire lighting system should be regulated from a switch-board located in one of the wings. Of course, great precaution should be taken to see that the insulation of all the wires should be perfect.

The only natural light should come from a central dome fitted with stained glass in artistic designs, and in this dome should also be located the large chandelier of arc lights, arranged beneath reflectors that will scatter the light equally in all directions. The other lights should be arranged in clusters along the walls and gallery fronts.

Great care should also be exercised in the construction and location of the ventilators, especially in buildings where gas is to be used as an illuminant.

It is needless to state that great care should be exercised in the selection of the materials to be used in the construction of buildings of this description, and as a matter of safety, they should be erected under the direction and supervision of State inspectors, who should be given unlimited authority to condemn and reject all material which in their judgment is considered of an inferior quality, or that will in any way lessen the fire-proof nature of the building.

Those States which have already undertaken the supervision of their workshops and factories are doing a grand and noble work for the cause of humanity, and a more thorough supervision of the construction of places of amusements by competent State officials can not help but be of inestimable benefit to mankind in general.

Of the interior decorations I have said nothing, as this is a matter which is of very little importance as far as public safety and convenience is concerned, and we can safely be left to the judgment of the proprietors of the building.

Hoping that my remarks have wearied none of you, and that some of you may have received a few new ideas which may at some future day be of practical benefit to you, I will close by thanking you for the kind and close attention you have accorded me, and with the hope that the day is not far distant when the inventive genius of man shall so far improved upon our present modes of construction, that the burning or falling of places of amusement, as well as other buildings, shall have become things of the past.

The committee on resolutions made the following report, which was adopted :

Recognizing the inequality of existing laws regulating the employment of women and minors in the different States and territories, and with a view of bringing into effect more uniformity in the same, which would be just and profitable to all engaged in industrial pursuits; first, by placing the employers in the different States on equal basis of competition as far as hours of labor are concerned, and by affording to the employed the same fair protection from the evils which follow the over-working of women and children, wherever practiced; therefor, we recommend the adoption by the several States of laws regulating the hours of labor of women and minors to forty-eight (48) per week.

We also recommend that all children under 16 years of age be prohibited from being employed in any occupation and that the education of such children be made compulsory, provision being made for the maintenance of indigent children during school year when found necessary by the State.

We further recommend the enactment of laws of the most stringent character establishing a thorough system of inspection of all buildings where people are employed or otherwise congregated, in which shall be required perfect hygienic conditions, separate and distinct toilet and dressing-rooms where women are employed, the proper guarding of machinery in all factories, making it compulsory upon employers to provide such guard when deemed necessary by an inspector, and to keep the same applied and in good order, making it a misdemeanor to remove such guards without promptly replacing the same. We also recommend that laws be enacted governing the construction of elevators and hoistways, to the extent of securing perfect construction and their safe operation, and providing that inspectors shall have power to condemn their use when on inspection they have been found to be defective, or dangerous; also requiring that all well-holes or elevator shafts shall be surrounded by a brick wall, or fire-proof material, from the basement to the roof, and that no elevator be opened when not supported with two or more lifting ropes, and provided with an efficient safety catch operated by means of a counterpois weight.

We also recommend, as a means of protection of life in factories and public buildings, that laws be enacted for the inspection of boilers, and a system of examination and registration of engineers engaged in operating the same.

Recognizing the great nervous strain upon the operators of cable and electric surface road cars, and the consequent additional danger to pedestrians, we earnestly recommend the adoption of laws, reducing the hours of labor of employes to not more than ten hours in twelve hours per day.

Realizing the great danger to public health by the manufacture of wearing apparel in tenement-house sweat-shops, we earnestly recommend the enactment of laws prohibiting the same in tenement or dwellings where others than members of the immediate family are employed, and also regulating the same in private families, to the end that vermin and disease may not be spread through this system.

We also recommend that national legislation be enacted compelling inventors to place suitable guards on all machines before a patent is granted for the same.

Respectfully submitted.

JOSEPH S. WEINTHALL.
